DEATH OF HIPPOLYTUS.

FRONTISPIECE TO THE FORTY-FIRST VOLUME.

An Engraving by Scott, from a Painting by Cooper.

WE have again recurred to that copious source, the Heathen Mythology, for a subject to embellish the present Volume of our work.—Hippolytus, we are informed, was son of Theseus and Hippolyte, famous for his virtues and his misfortunes. His stepmother Phædra fell in love with him, and when he refused to pollute his father's bed, she accused him of offering violence to her person before Theseus. Her accusation was readily believed, and Theseus entreated Neptune severely to punish the incontinence of his son. Hippolytus fled from the resentment of his father, and, as he pursued his way along the seashore, his horses were so frightened at the noise of sea-calves, which Neptune had purposely sent there, that they ran among the rocks till his chariot was broken and his body torn to pieces. Temples were raised to his memory, particularly at Trœzene, where he received divine honours. According to some accounts, Diana restored him to life.

HENRY BUNBURY, ESQ.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

IN your memoir of the late Henry Bunbury, Esq. you promised a list of his works. I can inform you, that two large folio volumes of them, containing 312 prints, many of them proofs, sold at the Duke of Roxburgh's sale in May last, for 31l. 10s.—I am, Sir, &c. &c.

PHILO-BUNBURY.

ON THE COLOUR OF CHILDERS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

I Perceive that in your Number for November, Mr. Lawrence has answered my enquiry, why he has has described Flying Childers as a chesnut horse? by saying, "there is a portrait, which he believes to be original, which represents him as a chesnut." In opposition to this supposed original, I shall quote two which are undoubtedly such; viz. one by Seymour, in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire, to whose ancestor Childers belonged: and another in the possession of Dr. Sandiver, of Newmarket, by Wootton, in both of which he is represented as a bay horse.

Mr. Lawrence says, that "the matter at present remains in obscurity;" but in my opinion, there can be no more doubt that Childers was not a chesnut, than that King Herod was not a grey, or Gimcrack a black horse. The picture, to which Mr. Lawrence refers, may very probably be an original one, but not of Childers; and was, perhaps, sold as a likeness of him, to some person ignorant on these subjects, by way of enhancing its value.—Mr. Lawrence says, "he is aware that his colour is generally supposed bay," and I cannot but wonder, that he (who is in general very well informed on the subjects of which he treats), should so hastily have decided on Childers being a chesnut, on the mere authority of one solitary picture, and that only believed to be an original.

Mr. Lawrence, (as far as I can judge from his works), is not only a person of considerable ability, but also possesses much good sense, and I trust he will excuse my concluding this letter, with recommending him, in any future publication, not to adopt new ideas, in opposition to generally received opinions, unless they can be supported by the strongest possible evidence.—I am, Sir, your's, &c.

A CONSTANT READER.

London, March 9.

P. S. I shall take this opportunity of noticing another inaccuracy in Mr. Lawrence's History of the Horse; he calls Gohanna "the best four-mile horse of his day." How happened it then, that though Waxy and he frequently ran four miles together, Gohanna never once won, when they met at even weights?

WILLIAM BALDOCK, ESQ.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

AS I am a constant reader of your entertaining Miscellany, I cannot refrain from expressing my surprise and regret that none of its numerous correspondents have made any comment or remark on the death of one of the greatest advocates of the turf, William Baldock, Esq. which event happened at his house at Petham, about four miles from this city, the 21st of December last.

Mr. Baldock began his career in life in the most humble of stations, but by the closest assiduity to business, the utmost integrity in all his transactions, and the smiles of Dame Fortune, he amassed property generally reported to the enormous amount of three hundred thousand pounds. Be that as it may, the whole he has left to the numerous progenies of distant relations, in the same judicious and prompt manner with which it had been realised.

Mr. B. was formerly Clerk of the the Race-course, and, while holding that situation, displayed his usual activity; and, from his connexion with Newmarket, Epsom, &c. the meetings had to boast then as much sport as almost any course in the kingdom; visitors from all parts of the county thronged into the city; and these weeks were to the inhabitants in general and innkeepers a complete harvest. He also at the same time kept several horses in training, some of them of the first rate; viz. Ostrich, Hop-planter, Hop-picker, Brewer, and Buckingham, and which were always at the disposal of the stewards and gentlemen, whenever the sport was expected to be bad without them. The multiplicity of business which he was engaged in, prevented his giving so much attention to this concern as he could wish; and at last compelled him to resign, to the regret of the admirers of the turf, and in particular the inhabitants, who had been greatly benefited by his exertions. And I am sorry to say, since that time, not only the sports, but the attendance of genteel company to these races, have most visibly fallen off; but whether it arose from that circumstance, or that this manly sport was altogether, in the southern part of England, on the decline, I am not able to state.

About five years since, upon one of his relations having the situation of Clerk of the Course, he purchased several blood horses, for the purpose of keeping up the respectability of the races. Rabbit, his favourite horse, which was bought of Lord Osborne, contributed much to the sport, though generally unsuccessful. The last he purchased was Expectation, a three-year-old colt, by Orville, and which displayed last year great racing qualities, and, I believe, is now kept in training by his nephew, the successor to the bulk of his fortune.

The above is the outline of this great man's life which appertains to this work, and coming from the pen of a person, not any ways interested by any of his acts, 'tis not the idle work of prejudice, but of an impartial admirer of his merits, which have been so greatly traduced in some of the prints of the day; no doubt at the instigation of some "disappointed man." T. O.

Canterbury, March 20, 1813.

HUNTING.

ON Thursday, the 26th ult. the Finden Fox Hounds (Sussex), kept up the sports of the field in a very capital style. They found in Lilly Holt, on the side hill, nigh to Washington, which reynard left to try the earths at Lion's-bank, but refused them; he then made a short turn or two about Whiston, after which he set his head straight down wind, and was killed, after a most gallant chase of an hour and thirty-two minutes, close to West Grinsted Park. The hounds were not cast once during the run, and went at their best pace, running into their brush-fallen victim from scent to view. The chase lasted an hour and ten minutes.

On Saturday, the 28th ult. the Renfrewshire Harriers threw off at Kilmalcom, and after a run of fifteen miles, the hare was so hard pressed, that she took into the Clyde, within a quarter of a mile of Port Glasgow. Two of the leading hounds dashed into the river, river, followed by the whole pack. Poor puss would have been killed in the water, but for a party of gentlemen shooting in a boat, who took her up alive, about three hundred yards from the shore. She was so exhausted that she died a few minutes after being brought to land.

On Tuesday, the 9th instant, the Harriers belonging to Sir Edward Smythe, Bart. of Acton Burnell, Salop, unkenneled a fox at Frudesley-Mill; and reynard broke over for Broom, Church Preen, Holt, Lushcott, Longville, Wenlock's-hedge, Lutwytche, Millicliope-Park, Munslow, Aston, Diddlebury, Hazledine Wood, Norton's Camp, Seifton Wood, and Corfton's Batch, where he was killed in a most gallant style, after a chase of three hours and a half, and almost without a check.

On Saturday, the 13th instant, the pack of Mr. Gooch, of Wootton, had a most excellent day in the neighbourhood of Norwich. The hare started from the grounds at the back of Catton, and challenged the country to Spixworth and St. Faith's, making a surprising double, back again to Catton, and thence to Mile Cross, where she was killed, after a run of an hour and three quarters, without a check at any one time exceeding the space of a minute.

On Wednesday, the 3d instant, the fox hounds of J. Colby, Esq. of Fynone, drew the different covers of Llanfirnach, Dolewillim, and Llauwinio, and at a late hour found a most gallant fox in the neighbourhood of Llanboidy; he immediately made for Carn-Ingley, but being too hard pressed, he ran the wind down Heafeddan, Pant-Howell, and Penhendfiw, at which cover a fresh fox broke off in view of three couple of the tail hounds, was pursued, and killed on Llanfirnach Mountain, after a tedious run in making for Carn-Menin, leaving three-and-twenty couple running the hunted fox over Cribin and Cwmeloch; but, being headed near Plaes Park, made short back to the right of Peurheol, and was run into in an open field, in front of Meidrim village, after a complete burst of five hours and forty minutes.

On Monday, the 8th instant, a bag fox was turned out before Lord Whitworth's hounds, on Ashdown Forest, which afforded a most excellent chase to a numerous field, dying gallantly, after many vigorous and wily exertions to escape. A gentleman who wished to time the run of reynard, on applying his hand to his fob, discovered, to his great mortification, that he had lost a valuable gold watch.

The Sinnington hounds, (Yorkshire) after a great many good runs this season, several of twenty miles, had a most severe one of five hours, on Tuesday, the 9th instant. After trying Haugh and Blansby park, found in Newton banks; the fox stole away, the hounds were presently out of cover, and followed him at an amazing rate straight to Lingmoor, beating the horses that had a fair start with them quite out of sight in the first three miles, and they went the first eight miles in half an hour.—The hounds were about ten minutes at fault in the cover, and then went to Garrihill and Hutton bank top; the fox, it is supposed, had been headed there, as he turned back across Spaunton and Appleton fields to Sinnington hags: skirting the top of the cover, and through part of Mr. Stockdale's wood, he turned short, and went for the Skipsters, which he ran up, and then turned for the Sun-Seven and Coulthard scar earths; finding them fast, he made for Howlgate head, up Appleton banks and Harnley-dale, over the fields to near Spaunton; he then twisted, going to Lingmoor spring wood, over Lingmoor, to Rumsdale, where he had been skulking; the hounds were here five minutes at fault. He now took up Douthwaite-dale, crossed over near the high end to Hutton banks, from thence down to, and across Lingmoor, down the east side, and crossed back again at the low end, and over to Yoadwath, down to Young's bank, near Yapley earths, then turned over the fields to Capbowl, up it, and over the fields almost to Gillimoor, back again over Hallgate moor, to Rumsdale, and over to Hutton bank top quarrys, where he saved himself in an open seam, the hounds being within a few hundred yards of him, going at full speed with a good head and a high scent. And thus ended a chase of near fifty miles, the pack running most of the time in the highest style, seldom allowing the horses to come near them.

On Monday, the 15th instant, Mr. Farquharson's hounds left Cattistock, (Dorset) after having had some of the finest runs ever witnessed in that county.—On Friday, the 5th, the hounds met at Wynyard's Gap, when a fox was instantly hallooed away, and gallantly run into in eighteen minutes. The hounds drew on to Pen wood, Cokerwood, through the Halstock covers, to Melbury, where a most capital fox was instantly unkenneled, and broke cover at half past two o'clock by Lord Ilchester's houses, over Bere earths, to Chelborough and Halstock bottom, where he was headed, and immediately returned by Corscombe coppice to East Chelborough, Benville-lane, through Ridge, Rampisham, skirting Wraxall, ran the whole of Chilfrome down to Tollerford, then crossed the hills to Wonford, and then turned, leaving Croxton furze to the right, and swam the river at Downfrome, forced Maiden Newton hills, thro' Sydling park coppice to Matson, over the water, mounted the hill to Godmanstone down to Forston, through Grimstone and Stratton to Charminster down—where, from the severity of the run and lateness of the day, the chase was given up. Out of a very numerous field collected from the neighbouring counties, a very few only witnessed the termination of the day's sport; among them may be enumerated the master of the pack, the Earls of Digby and Ilchester, Mr. Grove, Mr. Baring, Mr. Hellyar, Mr. Butler, Mr. R. Bridge, Mr. Nicholls, and Mr. Smith.—The distress and misery which befel a multitude of horses and their riders, beggar all description.

NATIONAL MANNERS OF THE MOORS.

THE inhabitants of the Empire of Morocco, may be divided into four classes, Moors, Arabs, Berebbers, and Shellahs.

The Moors are the descendants of those who were driven out of Spain;

Spain; they inhabit the cities of Morocco, Fas, Mequinas, and all the coast towns, as far southward as the province of Haha. Their language is a corrupt Arabic, intermixed with Spanish.

The Arabs have their original stock in Sahara, from whence they emigrate to the plains of Morocco, whenever the plague, famine, or any other calamity, depopulates the country, so as to admit of a new colony, without injuring the territory of the former inhabitants. These Arabs live in tents, and speak the language of the Koran, somewhat corrupted. They are a restless and turbulent people, continually at war with each other; in one province a rebellious kabyle, or clan, will fight against a neighbouring loyal one, and will thus plunder and destroy one another, till, fatigued by the toils of war, they mutually cease, when, the next year perhaps, the rebellious clan will be found fighting for the Emperor against the former loyal one, now become rebellious. This plan of setting one tribe against another is an act of policy of the Emperor, because if he did not, in this manner, quell the broils continually breaking out amongst them, he would be compelled, in order to preserve tranquillity in his dominions, to employ his own army for that purpose, which is generally occupied in more important business.

The Berebbers inhabit the mountains of Atlas, north of the city of Morocco, living generally in tents; they are a robust, nervous people, having a language peculiar to themselves, which differs more from the Arabic, or general language of Africa, than any two languages of Europe differ from each other; it is probably a dialect of the ancient Carthaginian. In travelling through the Berebber Kabyles of Ait Imure and Zemure Shelluh, I noticed many who possessed the old Roman physiognomy. The general occupation of these people is husbandry, and the rearing of bees for honey and wax.

The Shelluhs inhabit the Atlas mountains, and their various branches south of Morocco; they live generally in towns, and are, for the most part, occupied in husbandry like the Berebbers, though differing from them in their language, dress, and manners; they live almost entirely on (Assona) barley-meal, made into gruel, and barley roasted or granulated, which they mix with cold water, when travelling: this is called Zimeta. They occasionally indulge in cuscasoe, a nutritive farinaceous food, made of granulated flour, and afterwards boiled by steam, and mixed with butter, mutton, fowls, and vegetables. Many families among these people are reported to be descended from the Portuguese, who formerly possessed all the ports on the coast; but who, after the discovery of America, gradually withdrew thither.

The Moorish dress resembles that of the ancient Patriarchs, as represented in paintings; that of the men consists of a red cap and turban, a (Kumja) shirt, which hangs outside of the drawers, and comes down below the knee, a (Caftan) coat, which buttons close before and down to the bottom, with large open sleeves; over which, when they go out of doors, they throw carelessly, and sometimes elegantly, a hayk, or garment of white cotton, silk, or wool, five or six yards long, and five feet wide. The Arabs often dispense with the caftan, and even with the the shirt, wearing nothing but the hayk.

The people of this Empire being born subjects of an arbitrary despot, they may be said to have no established laws; they know no other than the will of the Prince, and if this should deviate, as it sometimes does, from the moral principles laid down in the Koran, it must be obeyed. Where the Emperor resides, he administers justice, in person, generally twice, and sometimes four times a week, in the (M'shoire) place of audience, whither all complaints are carried. Here access is easy; he listens to every one, foreigners or subjects, men or women, rich or poor; there is no distinction, every one has a right to appear before him, and boldly to explain the nature of his case; and although his person is considered as sacred, and established custom obliges the subject to prostrate himself, and to pay him rather adoration than respect, yet every complainant may tell his story without the least hesitation or timidity; indeed, if any one is abashed, or appears diffident, his cause is weakened in proportion. Judgment is always prompt, decisive, plausible, and generally correct.

When a Mooselmin is inclined to marry, he makes inquiry of some confidential servant respecting the person of her mistress; and if he receives a satisfactory description of the lady, and opportunity is sometimes procured to see her at a window, or other place, this interview generally determines whether the parties are to continue their regards; if the suitor be satisfied with the lady, he seeks an occasion of communicating his passion to the father, and proposes to marry his daughter. The father's consent being obtained, he sends presents to the lady, according to his circumstances, which being accepted, the parties are supposed to be betrothed, and marriage follows.

It is not expected that the woman should have a fortune, or a settlement; but if the father be rich, he generally gives a dowry to his daughter, and a quantity of pearls, rubies, diamonds, &c. The dowry remains the property of the female, and in case of a separation, by consent of the husband, is returned to her. These separations proceed from various causes, as barrenness, the disappointment of expectation, or incompatibility of disposition. Separation, however, not originating in the above causes, is reprobated as immoral and disreputable.

THE KITE AND THE WEASEL.

AS John Bunford, jun. Esq. of Stonehall, county Westmeath, was one day in the latter part of last month, overseeing his men, his attention was directed towards an adjoining field by the squeaking of a rabbit, which was trying to extricate itself from the venomous hold of a weasel.—While looking at the scuffle, and desirous to see how it would terminate, a kite made a descent as a claimant for some of the booty, which the weasel attacked with fury. The new contest lasted for a few minutes, when the kite sought refuge by flight, ascending almost perpendicularly from the spot; but the weasel, attaching itself to the neck of the bird, came off victor, and succeeded by bringing it down from an immense height to the ground.

DRAM-

DRAM-DRINKING VINDICATED.

MR. EDITOR,

THE number of vulgar errors common in the world, is more than man is able to point out. There hath been, I believe, a volume collected and published, for the good of the public; yet the public seems to have benefited but little from it, as there are, to this day, a long list of vulgar errors, false notions, misconceptions, &c. very prevalent among men. In this last we find dram-drinking illustrated and highly decried, as a most pernicious, baneful, life-sapping habit, which I shall endeavour to shew is a vulgar error, and will maintain it to be not only perfectly innocent in its effects, but that it is very salutary, nay, in many cases, absolutely necessary to the health and comfort of many, both males and females.

You will, probably, Mr. Editor, think me to be on the sophistical and rhapsodical strain, whilst some others, who are blest with Mrs. Slipslop's second-hand knowledge and comprehension of words and rhetoric, will say, that I am ironing, but I do assure you and them, that I was never more serious in my life, and trust I shall convince the world, in the clearest and most sientifical manner, that dram-drinking is very salubrious and necessary to the comfortable feelings, health, &c. of mankind; and that the learned and ignorant have been in a vulgar error in supposing the contrary.

Three or four centuries ago, brandy was confined to the apothecaries' shops, and by them vended as a medicament. When a doctor or apothecary was called in on a medical account, to a poor man, borne down with various cares, hard labour, low vegetable diet, a scolding, bad managing, gossipping wife, numerous children, &c.; or to a poor woman harrased nearly out of life, as well as health and spirits, with a sottish, brutish, drunken, savage husband, the doctor or apothecary, if they possessed a grain of common sense, did not take from such poor sufferers sixteen or twenty ounces of blood, nor give them either emetic or cathartic; nor did they tell the vapoured, hysterical, fidgetty woman, as the once popular Dr. Radcliffe did a lady, "your must wipe your a—e with a ballad." No, no, they gave such sufferers a phial of two or three ounces of genuine brandy, with directions to take two drams of it twice or thrice in a day, either on a lump of sugar or in a glass of rue, or some other tea, that was thought to be proper to the case. This mode of treatment gave the patients great relief and comfort, and they recovered their health and spirits in a little time. In this manner the virtues of brandy or dram-drinking became public; if a woman had the vapours, was hysterical or maggotty, or a man had a relaxed foul stomach, wind, cholic, &c. brandy was the sure cure; the remedy was loved; every one recommended it; and brandy became a general medicament.

People, in their conjectural inferences, are apt to fall into erroneous, false notions of things and consequences, and argue a matter, not according to the dictates of reason, but according to their passions, propensities, appetites, &c. as no doubt they did with respect to dram-drinking, reasoning and debating the case, according to the golden rule of three, if one give me so much, what what will three give me, and as I have received such relief and comfort from two drams twice or thrice in a day, what relief and comfort shall I experience from two ounces five or six times in a day?

By this, Mr. Editor, I trust you are convinced that dram-drinking is perfectly harmless, and that at particular seasons and cases, it is highly salutary and necessary to the health and comfortable feelings of most individuals; but habitual ounce-drinking of ardent spirits, we all are certain is pernicious in its effects, and fatal in its consequences if persisted in. An occasional ounce, however, does no harm, or if it do a small injury, nature recovers again; the faculties, functions, and springs of existence, are not materially hurt by a glass of ardent spirits, once in a month, or something oftener.

There is another vulgar error, which springs from the former—one habitual dram, or rather ounce-drinker, out of several hundred, may, by great chance, die at the age of sixty-five or seventy, which is the common age of men. At such a rare and singular event, men cry out, dram-drinking did not shorten his life, he lived and enjoyed himself to age of man; then they secretly comfort themselves, that a similar course of living will not shorten their days, when the dram or ounce-drinker, who died at sixty-five or seventy, had he been properly temperate, might have arrived at ninety or more; and likewise, that two ounces of ardent spirits had no more effect on his extraordinarily strong constitution, than half an ounce has on the generality of weak and frail mortal men.

A Friend to Dram, and an Enemy to Ounce, Drinking.

PEDIGREE AND PERFORMANCES
OF
That once celebrated Racer,

GREY DIOMED.

HE was bred by Sir T. C. Bunbury, Bart. and foaled in 1785.

Grey Diomed, was got by Diomed; his dam, Grey Dorimant, by Dorimant; grandam, Dizzy, by Blank; great grandam, also called Dizzy, by the Ancaster Driver, Gallant's Smiling Tom, Oysterfoot, Old Merlin, Mr. Croft's Commoner, out of the Duke of Somerset's Coppin Mare.

Diomed was got by Florizel; his dam, (own Sister to Juno) by Spectator, Blank, Childers, out of Miss Belvoir, by Grey Grantham.

Dorimant was got by Otho; his dam by Babram; grandam, Chiddy, by the Hampton-Court Childers, out of the Duke of Somerset's Bald Charlotte, by Old Royal.

Diomed, Dorimant, Florizel, Otho, and most of the other horses and mares in the above Pedigrees, were the first racers of their time, and Grey Diomed was the first of his Sire's get that started.

GREY DIOMED'S PERFORMANCES.

At Newmarket First October Meeting, 1787, Grey Diomed, (then two years old) 8st. 7lb. beat the Duke of Bedford's grey filly, by Mambrino, 8st. 3lb. the first half of R. M. 200gs.—Seven to 4 on Grey Diomed. On Monday, in the Houghton Meeting, he won a Sweepstakes of 100gs. each, (six Subscribers) T. Y. C. beating Goliah and Ponto, 8st. each.—Even betting on Ponto, and 7 to 4 against Grey Diomed. On Friday, he he beat Miss Tomboy, 8st. each, the first half of R. M. 200gs.—Six to 4 on Miss Tomboy. He was then sold to the Honourable Mr. Fox.

Newmarket First Spring Meeting, 1788, Grey Diomed, 8st. 5lb. beat Clown, 8st. 1lb. Ab. M. 300gs.—Six to 5 on Grey Diomed. In the July Meeting, he won the Town Plate of 50l. the last mile and a distance of B. C. beating Minos, Star, Amadis, Busy, &c.—Six to 4 on Amadis, and 7 to 2 against Grey Diomed. And received 150gs. from Alarm, to whom he was to have allowed 18lb. Ab. M.—He also, at 8st. received 40gs. each from Nutmeg, 6st. 13lb. and Goliah, 7st. 10lb. Ditch Mile. In the First October Meeting, he won the 1400gs. 8st. 3lb. Ditch-in, beating Aurelius.—Six to 4 on Aurelius.—And received 100gs. each from Cardock and Turnip; also 80gs. compromise from Cardock:—In the same Meeting, at 8st. 2lb. he won a Handicap Stakes of 50gs. each, 20gs. ft. Ditch-in, beating Poker, 4 yrs old, 8st. 8lb. Hawthorn, 3 yrs old, 6st. 12lb. Sunflower, 4 yrs old, 8st. 4lb. and Turnip, 3 yrs old, 7st. 4lb.—Director and Busy, both three-year-olds, 7st. 2lb. each, paid forfeit:—Six to 4 on Grey Diomed.—He received 100gs. from Altamont, and 85gs. each from Amadis and Aurelius, in a Stakes of 200gs. each, Across the Flat. In the Houghton Meeting, he received 120gs. from Jubilator.

In the Craven Meeting, 1789, Grey Diomed received 200gs. from Feenow; and at 8st. 7lb. he beat Alarm, 6st. 11lb. Across the Flat, 300gs.—Four to 1 on Grey Diomed.—And in the First Spring Meeting, he received 40gs. compromise from Clown. Grey Diomed was then sold, with his engagements, to the Duke of Bedford; and in the same Meeting, he won the Claret Stakes of 200gs. each, h. ft. (ten Subscribers) 8st. 7lb. each, B. C. beating Sir Thomas, (who received back his Stake), Countryman, Feenow, and Aurelius:—Two to 1 on Grey Diomed. In the Second Spring Meeting, he beat Harpator, 5 yrs old, 8st. each, R. M. 500gs.—Six to 4 on Grey Diomed.—And at 8st. he received 80gs. compromise from Alexander, aged, 8st. 13lb. T. Y. C. 200gs. h. ft. In the July Meeting, at 8st. he won 60gs. Ditch-in, beating Gunpowder, 5 yrs old, 8st. 8lb. Minos, 4 yrs old, 8st. and Alexander, aged, 9st.—Six to 4 against Grey Diomed. On Monday, in the Second October Meeting, at 8st. 5lb. he received 180gs. from Nimble, 8st. Across the Flat.—And on Thursday, at 8st. he won a Sweepstakes of 200gs. each, h. ft. B. C. beating Poker, 5 yrs old, 7st. 6lb.—Harpator, 5 yrs old, 8st. 2lb. paid forfeit.—Seven to 2 on Grey Diomed. In the Houghton Meeting, he was beat by the Prince's Traveller, 8st. each, B. C. 500gs.

On Monday, in the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, 1790, Grey Diomed, 8st. 7lb. beat the Prince's Bubble, 6 yrs old, 7st. two middle miles of B. C. 300gs.:—Six to 5 on Grey Diomed. And on Saturday, at 7st. 12lb. he beat the Prince's Traveller, 8st. 7lb. B. C. 500gs.:—Four to 1 on Traveller. And in the First October Meeting, at 8st. he won 50l. R. C. beating Poker, 6 yrs old, 8st. 5lb. Bashful, 4 yrs old, 7st. 5lb. Magpie, 4 yrs old, 7st. 5lb. Omen, aged, 8st. 7lb. and Schoolboy, aged, 8st. 7lb.—Seven to 4 on Grey Diomed.

At Newmarket First Spring Meeting, 1791, Grey Diomed, 9st. 5lb. won a Handicap Purse of 50gs. Ditch-in, beating Gunpowder, 6 yrs old, 8st. 12lb. Harpator, 6 yrs old, 9st. 2lb. Burgundy, 3 yrs old, 6st. 1lb. Trial, 3 yrs old, 6st. 8lb. and Pelican, 3 yrs old, 6st. 9lb.—Three to 1 against Grey Diomed, and 3 to 1 against Pelican. In the Second Spring Meeting, he won the Jockey-Club Plate, 8st. 7lb. each, B. C. beating Bustler and Traveller.—Five to 2 on Traveller.

At Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, 1792, Grey Diomed, 9st. 2lb. won the 140gs. B. C. beating Æacus, 5 yrs old, 8st. 4lb.—Five to 4 on Grey Diomed.—And on the same day, he won the Jockey-Club Plate, 8st. 7lb. each, B. C. beating Pipator, Toby, Skylark, and Bustler:—Two to 1 against Pipator, 5 to 2 against Grey Diomed, 3 to 1 against Toby, and 7 to 1 against Skylark. And at Winchester, at 9st. 6lb. he won 50l. beating at two four-mile heats, Lord Belfast's Wonder, 6 yrs old, 9st. After being beat by Mendoza in the Newmarket Second October Meeting, he was sold for 500gs. to Mr. John Smith, of Market-Weighton, Yorkshire, who took him into Russia: and on the 28th of June, 1793, he won the Cup at Moscow, beating Count Orloff's Tandem and Mr. Rounding's Honest Sadler.—He also won several other valuable Prizes, and was the best racer, during the time of his running, that appeared in that country.—Mr. Smith then made him a public Stallion for three seasons; after which, he sold him to Mr. Massaloff for 8000 rubles; at that time equal to 1000 pounds or guineas English money.—He remained in Mr. Massaloff's Stud until the time of his death, which happened in the year 1801.—He was allowed to be one of the most valuable Stallions ever exported into that country.

 Thomas Gilbank, (at that time a boy) who was engaged by Mr. Smith to take care of Grey Diomed, on his passage, and during the time that he remained in his possession, was engaged to Mr. Massaloff when he purchased Grey Diomed, and was in that Gentleman's service in December last, when the writer hereof had the pleasure of hearing from him.—T. Gilbank, has been several times since in England, and had the care of Lord Darlington's Doncaster, by Sir Peter Teazle, and others, who were exported into Russia, the latter end of the year 1804.

CURE OF HYDROPHOBIA.

THE following, case which occurred at Atcham, near Shrewsbury, will be found interesting, as it fully corroborates the successful mode of treatment, which had been practised by Mr. Tymon, of the 22d Dragoons, at Arcott, and Dr. Schoolbred, at Calcutta; both of which instances were certified to the Bombay Government, and published by order of the Governor in Council.* The present case is thus detailed by Mr. Wynne, of Shrewsbury:

"Abraham Cooke, who resides at Atcham, four miles distant from Shrewsbury, was, upon the 22d of

January

January last, bitten in the hand by a pointer bitch, bearing evident signs of being mad. He almost immediately walked to Shrewsbury. On his arrival, the bitten part was excised by Mr. Thomas Sutton, surgeon. The wound soon healed, and he continued in good health and spirits, always making light of the accident, until the 5th of February, when he began to complain of an uneasiness and soreness in that part of his hand where he had received the injury. On the 6th and 7th, it became gradually worse; and on the 8th, in the morning, after a restless night, he arose with increased pain and soreness in his hand, attended with head-ache, sickness, and oppression at the pit of his stomach: his breathing was difficult. Notwithstanding these symptoms he went to his work, but very soon became much worse. He was prevailed upon to drink some warmed beer, and was immediately seized with violent vomitings. He with difficulty reached his home, and on his way was much distressed, as he apprehended that the people then passing were determined to ride over him. His wife pressed him to take some water; he shewed great dread of it, and could not be prevailed upon to drink any, assigning, as the reason of his objection, the pain and vomiting occasioned by swallowing the beer. She then procured some surfeit-water, to which he made the same objection; she put it to his mouth, but could not say whether any was swallowed; if any, it must have been a very small quantity. All the symptoms rapidly increased: his looks were frightful; his eyes staring and inflamed; his face likewise was inflamed, and his features were distorted, and indicated the greatest dread and anxiety. With difficulty he was detained in his bed, and he appeared to be watching, and anxious to escape some object which occasioned his distress. At this time (about one o'clock p.m.) I was passing through the village, and was desired to visit him: I found him in the situation related. In a very short time afterwards his head, and also his left hand and arm, appeared convulsed. I waited to hear the history of the accident from his wife, and then pressed him to drink some water; I could not prevail; and although I did not observe any additional horror at the moment, still it was evident he was too much agitated to be able to drink. I was truly anxious for the advice and assistance of my much-esteemed friend Mr. Thomas Sutton; at the same time I was aware that the delay of an hour might hazard the life of our patient. I therefore had recourse to the abstraction of a large quantity of blood, and allowed it to flow until he fainted. He remained for near an hour with scarcely a perceptible pulse; and it was evident, during the whole time, that his disease was abating. His countenance became composed, and much paler; his eyes were less inflamed, the convulsions ceased, and to my complete satisfaction, he enquired if he might drink some water; which, when it was brought to him, he seemed to enjoy. I now left him, desiring that, if any return of his disease took place, I might be immediately acquainted. I sent him large doses of Opium, with Calomel, and James's Powder, adhering, as closely as possible, to the successful plan adopted by Dr. Schoolbred, and and communicated in the Medical and Physical Journal for January, 1813.

"On the 9th, at seven o'clock in the morning, I again visited him. He had slept the early part of the night, but had been disturbed with horrid dreams; at the same time he told me, 'he had not been half so much alarmed by his dreams, as he was with the appearance of the dog in his room, the day before, and which did not leave the room until he fainted from the bleeding.'—He seemed agitated, said he was dreadfully ill, and should never sleep again. There were convulsive startings in his hand, wrist, and shoulders. He told me he thought there was something alive in his wrist—he refused to take either coffee or water. His countenance was composed and thoughtful; he started at the slightest sound or motion; and said every kind of noise distracted his brain, and that his neighbours had been making a noise on purpose all night. I repeated the bleeding, and the result was exactly the same as before described—he fainted: and from that time was perfectly composed, until about three o'clock p. m. when his wife thought for a moment she observed a twitching in his shoulder.

"On the 10th, I saw him comfortable.—On the 11th, after sitting up for some time, he was much fatigued and fainted.—I was sent for, and upon my arrival, his wife said, she "was sorry I had been troubled to come, as the fit was nothing like what I had seen before, and was not more than such as he had been accustomed to, when he had been drinking hard, or was much tired, and that it was against her consent that the messenger came." I was satisfied, from appearances, she was right; and I left him without any apprehension.—Since that time I have regularly visited him, and there has not been one untoward symptom. He is now apparently well, excepting that his mouth is sore from the effect of the mercury.

"Immediately on my return from Atcham on the 8th, I called upon Mr. Thomas Sutton, and requested him to take the earliest opportunity of observing the case, and begged that he would have the kindness to suggest any thing that he thought likely to be of service. He and Mr. Sutton, as well as others of the profession, have been present."

ON TRAINING.

FROM the preceding account of Capt. Barclay's method of training, it will be seen, that he commences with the evacuating process, and that three purgative doses are deemed sufficient to clear any man from the impurities which it is requisite to throw off, preparatory to entering on the course of regimen and exercise. And in this stage of the business, the objects to be attained, are the purification of the animal system, and the promotion of the digestive powers.

The diet or regimen is the next point of consideration, and it is very simple. As the intention of the trainer is to preserve the strength of the pedestrian, he must take care to keep him in good condition by nourishing food. Animal diet is alone prescribed, and beef beef and mutton are preferred. The lean of fat beef cooked in steaks, with very little salt, is the best, and it should be rather underdone than otherwise. Mutton being reckoned easy of digestion, may be occasionally given, to vary the diet, and gratify the taste. The legs of fowls are highly esteemed. It is preferable to have the meat BROILED, as much of its nutritive qualities is lost by roasting or boiling.* Biscuit and stale bread are the only preparations of vegetable matter which are permitted to be given; and every thing inducing flatulency must be carefully avoided. Veal and lamb are never allowed, nor pork, which operates as a laxative on some people; and all fat or greasy substances are prohibited, as they induce bile, and consequently injure the stomach. But it has been proved by experience, that the lean of meat contains more nourishment than the fat, and in every case, the most substantial food is preferable to any other kind.

Vegetables, such as turnips, carrots, or potatoes, are never given, as they are watery, and of difficult digestion. On the same principle, fish must be avoided, and besides, they are not sufficiently nutritious. Neither butter nor cheese is allowed; the one being very indigestible, and the other apt to turn rancid on the stomach. Eggs are also forbidden, excepting the yolk taken raw in the morning. And it must be remarked, that salt, spiceries, and all kinds of seasonings, with the exception of vinegar, are prohibited.

With respect to liquors, they must be always taken cold; and home-brewed beer, old, but not bottled, is the best. A little red wine, however, may be given to those who are not fond of malt liquor; but never more than half a pint after dinner. Too much liquor swells the abdomen, and of course injures the breath. The quantity of beer, therefore, should not exceed three pints during the whole day, and it must be taken with breakfast and dinner, no supper being allowed. Water is never given alone, and ardent spirits are strictly prohibited, however diluted. It is an established rule to avoid liquids as much as possible, and no more liquor of any kind is allowed to be taken than what is merely requisite to quench the thirst. Milk is never allowed, as it curdles on the stomach. Soups are not used;† nor is any thing liquid taken warm, but gruel or broth, to promote the operation of the physic; and the sweating liquor mentioned before. The broth must be cooled in order to take off the fat, when it may be again warmed; or beef tea may be used in the same manner, with little or no salt. In the days between the purges, the pedestrian must be fed as usual, strictly adhering to the nourishing diet by which he is invigorated.

* "It may serve as a preliminary rule, that fresh meat is the most wholesome and nourishing. To preserve these qualities, however, it ought to be dressed so as to remain tender and juicy; for it is by this means, it will be easily digested, and afford most nourishment."—Willich on Diet and Regimen, p. 313.

† "Broths and soups require little digestion; weaken the stomach, and are attended by all the pernicious effects of other warm and relaxing drink."—Willich on Diet, &c. p. 304.

Profuse

Profuse sweating is resorted to as an expedient for removing the superfluities of flesh and fat.—Three or four sweats are generally requisite, and they may be considered the severest part of the process.

Emetics are only prescribed if the stomach be disordered, which may sometimes happen, when due care is not taken to proportion the quantity of food to the digestive powers. But in general, the quantity of aliment is not limited by the trainer, but left entirely to the discretion of the pedestrian, whose appetite should regulate him in this respect.

Although the chief parts of the training system depend upon SWEATING, EXERCISE, and FEEDING, yet the object to be obtained by the pedestrian would be defeated, if these were not adjusted, each to the other, and to his constitution. The skilful trainer will, therefore, constantly study the progress of his art, by observing the effect of the processes separately, and in combination.

If a man retains his health and spirits during the process, improves in wind, and increases in strength, it is certain that the object intended will be obtained. But if otherwise, it is to be apprehended that some defect exists, through the unskilfulness or mismanagement of the trainer, which ought instantly to be remedied by such alterations as the circumstances of the case may demand. It is evident, therefore, that, in many instances, the trainer must be guided by his judgment, and that no fixed rules of management can, with absolute certainty, be depended upon, for producing an invariably and determinate result. But, in general, it may be calculated, that the known rules are adequate to the purpose, if the pedestrian strictly adheres to them, and the trainer bestows a moderate degree of attention to his state and condition during the progress of the training.

It is farther necessary to remark, that the trainer, before he proceeds to apply his theory, should make himself acquainted with the constitution and habits of his patient, that he may be able to judge how far he can, with safety, carry the different parts of the process. The nature of his disposition should also be known, that every cause of irritation may be avoided; for, as it requires great patience and perseverance to undergo training, every expedient to soothe and encourage the mind should be adopted.

It is impossible to fix a precise period for the completion of the training process, as it depends upon the condition of the pedestrian; but from two to three months, in most cases, will be sufficient, especially if he be in tolerable condition at the commencement, and possessed of sufficient perseverance and courage to submit cheerfully to the privations and hardships to which he must unavoidably be subjected.

Training is indispensably necessary to those who are to engage in corporal exertions beyond their ordinary powers. Pedestrians, therefore, who are matched either against others or against time; and pugilists, who engage to fight; must undergo the training process before they contend, as the issue of the contest, if their powers be nearly equal, will, in a great measure, depend upon their relative condition. But the advantages of the training system are not confined to pedestrians and pugilists alone. They

They extend to every man; and were training generally introduced, instead of medicines, as an expedient for the prevention and cure of diseases, its beneficial consequences would promote his happiness, and prolong his life.

It is well known to physiologists, that both the solids and fluids which compose the human frame are successively absorbed and deposited. Hence a perpetual renovation of the parts ensues, regulated, as they are, by the nature of our food and general habits.—(Bell's Anatomy, vol. i. p. 12).—It, therefore, follows, that our health, vigour, and activity, must depend upon regimen and exercise, or, in other words, upon the observance of those rules which constitute the theory of the training process. The effect has accordingly corresponded with the cause in all instances where training has been adopted; and, although not commonly resorted to as the means of restoring invalids to health, yet there is every reason to believe, that it would prove effectual in curing many obstinate diseases, such as the gout, rheumatism, bilious complaints, &c. &c.

"Training, (says Mr. Jackson), always appears to improve the state of the lungs. One of the most striking effects is to improve the wind; that is, it enables a man to draw a larger inspiration, and to hold his breath longer." He farther observes,—"By training, the mental faculties are also improved. The attention is more ready, and the perception more acute, probably owing to the clearness of the stomach, and better digestion."—(Code of Health, vol. ii. p. 103.)

It has been made a question whether training produces a lasting, or only a temporary effect on the constitution. It is undeniable, that if a man be brought to a better condition; if corpulency, and the impurities of his body, disappear; and if his wind and strength be improved by any process whatever, his good state of health will continue, until some derangement of his frame shall take place from accidental or natural causes. If he shall relapse into intemperance, or neglect the means of preserving his health, either by omitting to take the necessary exercise, or by indulging in debilitating propensities, he must expect such encroachments to be made on his constitution, as must soon unhinge his system. But if he shall observe a different plan, the beneficial effects of the training process will remain until the gradual decay of his natural functions shall, in mature old age, intimate the approach of his dissolution.

The ancients entertained this opinion.—"They were," says Dr. Buchan, "by no means unacquainted with, or inattentive to, these instruments of medicine, although modern practitioners appear to have no idea of removing disease, or restoring health, but by pouring drugs into the stomach. Herodicus is said to have been the first who applied the exercises and regimen of the gymnasium to the removal of disease, or the maintenance of health. Among the Romans, Asclepiades carried this so far, that he is said by Celsus almost to have banished the use of internal remedies from his practice. He was the inventor of pensile beds, which were used to induce sleep, and of various other modes of exercise and gestation, and rose to great eminence as a physician in Rome. In his own person he afforded forded an excellent example of the wisdom of his rules, and the propriety of his regimen. Pliny tells us that, in early life, he made a public profession that he would agree to forfeit all pretensions to the name of a physician, should he ever suffer from sickness, or die but of old age; and, what is more extraordinary, he fulfilled his promise, for he lived upwards of a century, and at last was killed by a fall down stairs.—(Code of Health, vol. ii. p. 123).

It may therefore be admitted, that the beneficial consequences, both to the body and the mind, arising from training, are not merely temporary, but may be made permanent by proper care and attention. The simplicity of the rules is a great recommendation to those who may be desirous of trying the experiment, and the whole process may be resolved into the following principles:—1st, The evacuating, which cleanses the stomach and intestines.—2d, The sweating, which takes off the superfluities of flesh and fat.—3d, The daily course of exercise, which improves the wind, and strengthens the muscles;—and, lastly, The regimen, which nourishes and invigorates the body.

The criterion by which it may be known whether a man be in good condition, or, what is the same thing, has been properly trained, is the state of the skin, which becomes smooth, elastic, and well-coloured, or transparent.—The flesh is also firm, and the person trained, feels himself light, and full of spirits. But in the progress of the training, his condition may be ascertained by the effect of the sweats, which cease to reduce his weight: and by the manner in which he performs one mile at the top of his speed. It is as difficult to run a mile at the top of one's speed, as to walk a hundred, and therefore, if he performs this short distance well, it may be concluded, that his condition is perfect, or that he has derived all the advantages which can possibly result from the training process.

The manner of training jockies is different from that which is applicable to pedestrians and pugilists. In regard to jockies, it is generally wasting, with the view to reduce their weight. This is produced by purgatives, emetics, sweats, and starvation. Their bodily strength is of no importance, as they have only to manage the reins of the courser, whose fleetness depends upon the weight he carries; and the muscular power of the rider is of no consequence to the race, provided it be equal to the fatigue of a three or four-mile heat.

Training for pugilism is nearly the same as for pedestrianism, the object in both being principally to obtain additional wind and strength.—But it will be best illustrated by a detail of the process observed by Crib, the champion of England, preparatory to his grand battle with Molineux, which took place on the 29th of September, 1811.

The champion arrived at Ury on the 7th of July of that year. He weighed sixteen stones; and from his mode of living in London, and the confinement of a crowded city, he had become corpulent, big-bellied, full of gross humours, and short-breathed; and it was with difficulty he could walk ten miles. He first went through a course of physic, which consisted of three doses; but for two weeks he walked about as he pleased, and generally generally traversed the woods and plantations with a fowling-piece in his hand. The reports of his musquet resounded every where through the groves and the hollows of that delightful place, to the great terror of the magpies and wood-pigeons.

After amusing himself in this way for about a fortnight, he then commenced his regular walking exercise, which at first was about ten or twelve miles a day. It was soon after increased to eighteen or twenty; and he ran regularly, morning and evening, a quarter of a mile at the top of his speed. In consequence of his physic and exercise, his weight was reduced, in the course of five weeks, from sixteen stones to fourteen and nine pounds. At this period, he commenced his sweats, and took three during the month he remained at Ury afterwards; and his weight was gradually reduced to thirteen stones and five pounds, which was ascertained to be his pitch of condition, as he would not reduce farther without weakening.

During the course of his training, the champion went twice to the Highlands, and took strong exercise. He walked to Mar Lodge, which is about sixty miles distant from Ury, where he arrived to dinner on the second day, being now able to go thirty miles a day with ease, and probably he could have walked twice as far if it had been necessary. He remained in the Highlands about a week each time, and amused himself with shooting. The principal advantage which he derived from these expeditions was the severe exercise he was obliged to undergo in following Captain Barclay. He improved more in strength and wind by his journies to the Highlands than by any other part of the training process.

His diet and drink were the same as used in the pedestrian regimen, and in other respects, the rules previously laid down were generally applied to him. That he was brought to his ultimate pitch of condition, was evident from the high state of health and strength in which he appeared when he mounted the stage to contend with Molineux, who has since confessed, that when he saw his fine condition, he totally despaired of gaining the battle.

Crib was altogether about eleven weeks under training, but he remained only nine weeks at Ury. Besides his regular exercise, he was occasionally employed in sparring at Stonehaven, where he gave lessons in the pugilistic art. He was not allowed much rest, but was constantly occupied in some active employment. He enjoyed good spirits, being all the time fully convinced that he would beat his antagonist. He was managed, however, with great address, and the result corresponded with the wishes of his friends.

It would be perhaps improper, while speaking of Crib, to omit mentioning, that, during his residence in the north of Scotland, he conducted himself in all respects with much propriety. He shewed traits of a feeling, humane, and charitable disposition, on various occasions.—While walking along Union-street in Aberdeen, he was accosted by a woman apparently in great distress. Her story affected him, and the emotions of his heart became evident in the muscles of his face. He gave her all the silver he had in his pocket.—"God bless your honour," she said, "ye are surely not an ordinary man!" man!"—This circumstance is mentioned with the more pleasure, as it affords one instance at least, in opposition to the mistaken opinion, that professional pugilists are ferocious, and totally destitute of the better propensities of mankind. The illustrious Mr. Windham entertained juster sentiments of the pugilistic art, as evinced by the print he presented to Mr. Jackson as a mark of his esteem. In one compartment, an Italian darting his stiletto at his victim is represented; and in the other, the combat of two Englishmen in a ring. For this celebrated genius was always of opinion, that nothing tended more to preserve among the English peasantry those sentiments of good faith and honour which have ever distinguished them from the natives of Italy and Spain, than the frequent practice of fair and open Boxing.

SAGACITY OF A GREY-HOUND.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

THE following fact, if you think it worth insertion, is very much at your service; and I hope it will be a sufficient excuse for my troubling you, that, both ancient and modern writers have thought it worth while to record the faithfulness of the dog and his attachment to home.

About two years ago, I gave a greyhound bitch, named Trenck, to a brother of mine, residing at Blackheath, who received her as a pensioner, by way of reward for her past services (which had been eminent), that she might pass the remainder of her days in ease, in preference to hanging her, because she could no longer "take the lead and keep it." She arrived there on a Sunday, and remained apparently satisfied with her new quarters, until Tuesday afternoon, when she absconded, and on the following Friday after, made her appearance at home, so completely exhausted, that she had no strength left to lap a little milk. The distance is not very great (about forty-two miles), but I certainly think it very extraordinary her coming through such a place as London, and of course over one of the three bridges, usually so crowded, excepting for three or four hours in the middle of the night, particularly as she had never been even used to a country town, but first saw light, and passed the whole of her life, at a lone insulated house. She was a white bitch, excepting her ears, which were yellow, and remarkably fond of being noticed, so that I cannot think how she escaped being taken up in London, had she come through in the day time; I am therefore disposed to believe she passed through in the night.

Poor Trenck had better have remained in Kent, as about a month after her return, she was bitten by a mad dog, with five or six of her companions, and was, in company with them, immediately shot.

I remain, Sir, your humble servant, T. C.

Hitchin, Herts, Feb. 26, 1813.

NEW WORK ON ANIMALS; SPORTING PICTURE.

A Description of more than THREE HUNDRED ANIMALS, including Quadrupeds, Birds, Fishes, Serpents, and Insects, &c. &c. &c. with elegant Wood Cuts, price in 12mo. 5s. 6d. boards, or on fine fine demy octavo paper, 10s. 6d. Crosby and Co.

THIS publication, we make no doubt, will prove equally interesting, to the Fowler, who salutes the earliest rays of the morn, in the field; to the rapid Hunter, who pursues the deer in the forests; to the patient Angler, on the flowing bank of the brook; and in general to every Sportsman, whose pleasure calls him abroad, and who feels inclined to study nature there. It is for this peculiar reason that we intend to give our opinion upon this work, and to present our readers with quotations relative to the different objects of their pursuits. The style, free from affectation and pomposity, is elegant, and adapted to the subjects successively treated; well-selected passages from celebrated authors; short views of original poetry; personal and well-authenticated observations, accompanied by anecdotes; contribute to render the book truly instructive and amusing, and to convey more effectually to the mind, the characteristics of the animals described therein.

The delineation of the Fox is particularly pleasing.

"The Fox is produced in most countries, and varies much in size and colour. In Muscovy some are white, some red, and others black. His abode is generally on the skirt of a wood, in a hole which some other animal has either voluntarily left or been driven from. Nature, who endowed him with sagacity, craft, and cunning, has not, however, allotted him a long life; being classed by her among the dog kind, the duration of his existence does not exceed twelve or fifteen years. His bite is tenacious and dangerous, as the severest blows cannot make him quit his hold; his eye is most significant, and expressive of every passion, as love, fear, hatred, &c. The Fox is the greatest enemy to the poultry-yard, which he depopulates often in the course of one night. But when his choice food, the chicken flesh, is not accessible, then he devours animal food of all kinds, even serpents, lizards, frogs, toads; and if his habitation is near the water, he even contents himself with shell-fish. In France and Italy he does a great deal of damage in vineyards, being very fond of grapes, and spoiling many for the choice of one bunch: his stratagems are well known, and need not to be recorded here."

The noble inhabitant of the forest, the Stag, is well described in the following article:

"The Stag is generally famed for long life, but upon no certain authority. The naturalists agree, however, upon this point, that his life may exceed forty years, but that his existence, as it has been asserted, reaches to three centuries, is not sufficiently proved to claim our belief; he comes to his full growth at five, soon after which his horns, which are yearly shed and renewed, grow from a narrower basis, and are less branching. He is the tallest of the deer kind. The Stag is called Hart after he has completed his fifth year. This creature is known in many countries; the female, called the Hind, is without horns. Every year, in the month of April, the male loses his antlers, and conscious of his temporary weakness, hides himself till his new ones are hardened. Little need be said of the pleasure taken in hunting the Stag, the Hart, and the Roe-buck, it being a matter well known in this this country, and in all parts of Europe. His flesh is accounted an excellent food, and even his horns, so useful to cutlers, when reduced to powder, are much esteemed in physic under the common name of hartshorn. The swiftness of the Stag is become proverbial, and the diversion of hunting this creature has, for ages, been looked upon as a royal amusement. When fatigued in the chase, he often throws himself in a pond of water, or crosses a river, and, when caught, he sheds tears like a child. Our great Bard, Shakespeare, gives us a beautiful description of this circumstance in "As You Like It," act II. scene I.

"To the which place a poor sequester'd Stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish; and indeed, my lord,
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting: and the big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase.

The Horse, and the various breeds of this most useful animal, are faithfully delineated; and the article of the Hare, does great credit to the feelings of the author.

The Partridge merited, and has obtained a conspicuous place in the pages of this publication.

"The partridge is in weight about fourteen ounces. The shape of this bird is peculiar to himself and the quail, having both a very short tail; his plumage, although it cannot boast of gaudiness, is very pleasing to the eye, being altogether a mixture of brown and fawn colour interspersed with grey and ash colour tints. The head is small and pretty, the beak strong, yet not long, and resembling that of all other granivorous birds. The female lays fifteen or eighteen eggs, and leads her brood in the corn fields with the utmost care. It is even told, that when she finds that the pointer is at hand, she turns out, affecting lameness, to decoy the dog, and thereby gives her brood time to escape the enemy's search. Partridges fly in companies, the young never leaving the old ones till after February, when they pair together and fly by two and two.

"The shooting of Partridges, Quails, and other innocent inhabitants of the fields, where they live at no body's expence, upon what the last gleaners have left behind, is well described in the following lines:

" ———————— Now mark
The fowler, as he stands and meditates
The cruel deed! See how, with steady grasp,
He holds the thund'ring messenger of death;
His eye fix'd,—levell'd on the fatal tube;
His forward leg,—Amidst the bristling corn
His dog, as if by skilful Flaxman cut
In Parian stone, or cast in lasting bronze
By far-fam'd Westmacott, stands forth unmov'd,
Ready to give the deadly signal.——Hark!
'Tis done—shot through the heart, she reels, she falls,
Far from her nest; whilst th' unsuspecting mate
Still leads the flutt'ring covey through the field."

The descriptions of the Pike and the Carp, deserve also the attention of the reader.

"The Pike.—The regions of fresh water have their sharks as well as the empire of the seas. This fish lives in rivers, lakes, and ponds:

ponds: and, in a confined piece of water, he will soon destroy all other fish, as he generally does not feed upon any thing else, and often swallows one nearly as big as himself; for through his greediness in eating, he takes the head foremost, and so draws it in by a little and little at a time, till he has absorbed the whole. I remember to have seen in the stomach of a large Pike a gudgeon of good size, the head of which had already received clear marks of the power of digestion, whilst the rest of the fish was still fresh and unimpaired.

"It is a very long-lived fish. In the year 1497, a Pike was caught at Hailbrun in Swabia, to which was affixed a brazen ring with the following words engraved on it in Greek characters, "I am the fish which was first of all put into this lake by the hands of the governor of the universe, Frederick the Second, the fifth of October, 1230." The Pike has a flat head and sharp teeth in his jaws, the under one of which is much more prominent than the superior one. This fish is of a white, firm, dry flesh, and wholesome. The larger and older, the more esteemed. The bones are long and pliant, and easily extracted in eating. The following lines are poetically expressive of the danger in which smaller fishes are at the approach of the Pike:

'Beware, ye harmless tribes; the tyrant comes,'
Exclaims the silver-mantled Naiad of the pond,
"Beware, ye flirting gudgeons, barbels fair,
And ye, quick-swimming minnows, gliding eels,
And all who breathe the lucid crystal of the lake,
Or lively sport betwixt the dashing wheels
Of river mills, beware; the tyrant comes!
Grim death awaits you in his gaping jaws
And lurks behind his hungry fangs—beware!"

Z.

"The best manner of cooking the Pike is to boil it in wine and water, or, in the absence of wine, with vinegar, accompanied with parsley, carrots, and other roots of agreeable flavour. It is served cold, upon a napkin, and eaten with oil and vinegar, with anchovy or cavice sauce."

"The Carp has a great fame for the sweetness of its flesh, and appears often with great repute on our tables, when measuring twelve inches between the eye and the beginning of the tail. The scales are large with a golden gloss upon a dark green ground. They grow sometimes to a great size, being then three or four feet in length, and contain a great quantity of fat. The soft roe of the Carp is esteemed a great delicacy among the epicures on our board. In the canals of Chantilly, formerly the seat of the Prince of Conde, Carps have been kept for above one hundred years, most of them appearing hoary through old age, and so tame that they answered to their names when the keeper called them to be fed. This fish has very small teeth and a broad tongue; the tail is widely spread as well as the fins, which are inclined to a reddish tint. Those that live in rivers and running streams are most approved, as those which inhabit the pools and ponds have generally a muddy disagreeable taste. It is said that they were brought first to England by Leonard Maschal, about two hundred and fifty years ago. They are very tenacious of life, and when cut in quarters, the head being divided in two, the pieces have often often been seen to jump off the dresser table, and even out of the frying-pan into the fire, which circumstance has given birth to the proverb.

'In genial spring, beneath the quiv'ring shade
Where cooling vapours breathe along the mead,
The patient fisher takes his silent stand
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed.
Our plenteous streams a various race supply,
The bright-ey'd pearch with fins of Tyrian dye;
The silver eel in shining volumes roll'd,
The yellow Carp in scales be-drop'd with gold;
Swift trouts, diversify'd with crimson stains,
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains.'

Pope's Windsor Forest.

We must conclude by observing, that every animal is most accurately delineated in a wood-cut, executed with truth and elegance, and that the whole has been so carefully attended to, that it may be placed in the hands of youth of either sex, with confidence and safety. Persons of a more advanced age, will find in the work entertainment and instruction, and in order to render the study of nature more easy, and to facilitate references to larger works upon natural history; the author has added a full and correct index of all the names in English, Latin, and French.

Mr. R. B. Davis proposes publishing by subscription, a Print, of his Majesty's Harriers, containing the Huntsman and Whipper-in, with their Horses, and about thirteen couples of Hounds; it is dedicated by permission to General Manners, and will most probably be much patronised, particularly by those Sporting Gentlemen who have partaken of the pleasure which the pack afforded in the best days of its prosperity.—The Hounds are to be disposed of early in April.

HYDROPHOBIA.

THAT dreadful disease, the hydrophobia, has been for some time very prevalent in the towns on the Sussex coast. Messrs. Lee, in their Lewes Journal, of the 22d of March, give the following interesting particulars on this subject:

" A number of dogs having lately run mad at Rose-Hill, and in the neighbourhood of that place, producing mischief to an extent that cannot be ascertained, John Fuller, Esq. reflecting on the horrid effects of hydrophobia, and as an example to others whom it may concern, on Monday, the 15th instant, highly to his honour, gave directions for the destruction of all his valuable dogs, and they were accordingly killed, consisting of four brace of high-bred spaniels, (whose excellence was the labour of many years), and a very superior pack of harriers. The spaniels had, a long time, been the admiration and envy of the sporting world, as few, if any, could be found to equal them in the field for beauty and action. Two of them have constantly accompanied Mr. Fuller's gamekeeper for ten successive years, in the pursuit of woodcocks, with unprecedented success, having had shot to them, within the above-mentioned time, three hundred hundred and four brace of that delicious bird.

"A printed paper, containing the following caution, has been circulated through the parish of Brightling:—'CAUTION.—In consequence of the number of dogs that have been, and now are, affected with that dreadful disease the hydrophobia, in this neighbourhood, the Magistrates request that all dogs may be closely confined, until every danger is supposed to be over; and recommend to the owners immediately to destroy such of them as can, by any possibility, be supposed to have been bitten.'

"On Monday, the 15th, a large mastiff dog, belonging to Mr. T. Chatfield, of Lewes, betrayed strong symptoms of madness; he was in consequence chained up, and died of the dreadful malady, in less than forty-eight hours afterwards."

TRIAL FOR DUELLING.

HAVING in a former Magazine given the particulars of the fatal duel between Lieutenants Stuart and Bagnell, of the Royal Marines, at Portsmouth, when the latter gentleman was unfortunately killed, we think it necessary to notice that Lieutenant Stuart was arraigned at the late Winchester Assizes, together with Lieutenant O'Hanlon, second to the deceased, on the charge of Wilful Murder, as returned by the Coroner's Inquest.

The only additional evidence which appeared on the trial, was that of Major-General Winter, and other Officers, who fully proved the intemperate and overbearing conduct of the deceased on several occasions, particularly the former, who stated his having received a challenge from the deceased, which he did not think proper to accept. It also appeared in evidence, that the deceased had pushed Lieutenant Stuart out of his lodgings "like a dog," and that he refused to apologise; that the parties fired by word; that on the first fire Lieutenant Stuart's pistol snapped, whilst the ball from that of his opponent nearly shot him. The pistol of the deceased was re-loaded, when they fired together, and Lieutenant Stuart's first shot took effect. Surgeon Madden proved that Lieutenant Stuart came to him in the greatest agitation, and sent him to the assistance of the deceased; he, Stuart, also sent people from a neighbouring cottage. It was distinctly proved, that Lieutenant Stuart evinced on this melancholy affair the greatest humanity and feeling. Previous to entering on his defence, the prisoner addressed the Court as follows:—

"My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury—In the awful and unfortunate situation in which I am placed, having this day held up a hand which never before was raised except in the defence of my person or my country, it is a duty I owe to myself, to address a few words to you relative to it. Gentlemen, no one can more deeply deplore the death of Lieutenant Bagnell than I do, and, I trust, the sorrow evinced by me on that occasion, will operate as a proof of what I say, and have its due weight on your minds. It is with the greatest reluctance that I am obliged to call the errors of the deceased from the tomb; but without particularly dwelling on the infirmities of his temper, I solemnly declare that the provocation, originally proceeding from him, was continued and repeated until the fatal hour of his death. Under an irritation of mind so excited, the dreadful catastrophe took place, which is the cause of my being placed in this awful and dreadful situation.—Gentlemen, I appeal to you as men of sense and feeling, is not the law of honour as imperative as the law of the land? He who has the temerity to violate a single article of its sacred code, meets worse than death, eternal infamy. He is like the outcast Indian of the East: it is contamination to touch; it is disgrace to speak to him. If, then, Gentlemen, it presses so severely on the citizen, how tyrannically does it dictate to the military man? In fact, he who refuses to resent an insult, loses his commission. Gentlemen, it is for you to weigh the evidence, to correct it, and to decide on my fate; but I have a firm reliance on your wisdom, I trust to your justice, but, above all, I hope for your mercy; that wisdom, the never-failing attendant on liberal and enlightened minds, for that mercy which at all times has so proudly and pre-eminently distinguished a Jury of Englishmen."

Several Officers spoke to the characters of the prisoners, and after a very able charge from Baron Sir George Wood, in which he dwelt at some length on the deceased's having fired two shots for the prisoner's one, and on the latter's humanity in exposing himself to send the only assistance which the deceased received, on the gross insult which a military man cannot receive without resenting, adverting to the attention and friendship displayed by Lieutenant O'Hanlon to his deceased friend—The Jury, without retiring from the box, returned a verdict of Not Guilty, to the evident satisfaction of a crowded Court.

CHARACTERISTIC ANECDOTE OF A FRENCHMAN.

JOHNSON sarcastically said of a Frenchman—

"All sciences a fasting Monsieur knows,
And, bid him go to hell—to hell he goes."

The following anecdote, from Chateau-Briand, proves at least the truth of the first line of the preceding couplet:—

"The national character," says he, "cannot be extinguished. Our seamen have a saying, that in founding new colonies, the Spaniards begin with building a church, the English a tavern, and the French a fort, and I would add, a ball-room. When I was in America, on the frontiers of the country of the Savages, I was informed, that in the next day's journey I should meet with a countryman of mine among the Indians. On my arrival among the Cayougas, a tribe belonging to the Troquois nation, my guide conducted me into a forest. In the midst of this forest stood a kind of barn, in which I found about a score of savages, of both sexes, bedaubed like conjurors, with their bodies half naked, their ears cut into figures, raven's feathers on their heads, and rings passed through their nostrils. A little Frenchman, powdered and frizzed in the old fashion, in a pea-green coat, a drugget waistcoat, muslin frill and ruffles, was scraping away on his kit, and making these Troquois dance to the tune of Madelon Fiquet. M. Violet, for that was his name, followed the profession fession of dancing-master among the savages, by whom he was paid for his lessons in beaver skins and bears' hams. He had been a scullion in the service of General Rochambeau, during the American war, but remaining at New York after the return of the French army, he resolved to give the Americans instruction in the fine arts. His views having enlarged with his success, the new Orpheus resolved to introduce civilization even among the roving hordes of the New World. In speaking to me of the Indians, he always styled them: "Ces Messieurs Sauvages," and "Ces Dames Sauvages." He bestowed great praise on the agility of his scholars, and in truth never did I witness such gambols in my life. M. Violet, holding his fiddle between his chin and his breast, tuned the fatal instrument: he then cried out in Troquois, "To your places!" and the whole troop fell a capering like a band of demons. Such is the genius of nations!"

ANCIENT CUSTOMS.

AMONGST the customs which formerly prevailed in this country during the season of Lent, was the following:—An officer, denominated the King's Cock Crower, crowed the hour each night, within the precincts of the palace, instead of proclaiming it in the ordinary manner of watchmen. This absurd ceremony did not fall into disuse till the reign of George I.

The custom of eating Tansy Puddings and Cakes at Easter was confined to some few places distant from the metropolis, and was introduced by the Monks; whereby, symbolically, to keep in remembrance the bitter herbs in use among the Jews at this season, though at the same time bacon was always part of the Easter fare, to denote a contempt of Judaism. The Jews, however, themselves, long since contrived to diminish the bitter flavour of the tansy, by making it a pickle for their paschal lamb, from whence we borrowed the custom of taking mint and sugar as a general sauce for that description of food.

The festivities of the May-pole, coming probably by legitimate descent from the Roman game, called Floralia, in honour of the goddess Flora, were once general in this country. Even the priests, joining with the people, used to go in procession to some adjoining wood on the May morning, and return in triumph with the much-prized pole, adorned with boughs and other tokens of the spring season. And our monarchs themselves, bending to the usages of the times, used to make parties of pleasure called Mayings, even to so late a period of our history as that of Henry the Eighth, who assembled his whole court upon one of these festive occasions at Shooter's Hill. These Mayings are still practised in the West and North of England. The May-pole, once fixed, remained until the end of the year, and was resorted to at all other seasons of festivity as well as during May. Some made of a more durable nature, even remained for years; being merely fresh ornamented, instead of being removed, as was the common practice. The last May-pole in London was taken down in 1717, and conveyed to Wanstead, in Essex, where it was fixed in the park for the support of an immensely large telescope. Its original height was upwards of one hundred feet above the surface of the ground, and its station on the east side of Somerset-House, where the new church now stands. Pope thus perpetuates it remembrance:—

"Amidst the area wide they took their stand,
Where the tall May-pole overlooks the Strand."

On the presumed CONSEQUENCES to SOCIETY, of EQUAL RANK in MARRIAGES, with Illustrative ANA.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

ALLOWING the full force of all that can be urged by aristocratic pride and worldly prudence, in this case, something will yet remain in favour of the natural equality of the human race, of the warmest feelings of the heart, and of goodness and respectability of character. A late well-known occurrence, involving the fate, probably the utter ruin and misery of a meritorious and respectable foreigner, who, during a twenty-years sojourn in this country, proved himself a useful member of society, in the honourable line of education, gave immediate rise to the above reflection. The records of daily occurrences stated, that Daminiani, an Italian teacher of languages in a family of royal slips, growing upon the banks of the Jordan, in consequence of an imprudent advance in the way of honourable profession of love to one of the females, was vindictively punished, by being banished the country under the operation of the alien act;—granting this to be circumstantially true, I shall not scruple to pass my hearty condemnation upon it, not only as a piece of unnecessary and barbarous severity, but of gross injustice, in the application of a punishment due only to crime, or at any rate misdemeanor, to a mere breach of prudence, or an error in the measure of respect; and that, in all probability, committed under circumstances, which rather entitled the delinquent to pity. Dismission, neglect, ridicule, would surely have been punishments fully commensurate with the offence, and they would also have been most effectual. Surely also, there might have been some vestige of fellow feeling, derived from a consideration of the low, not indeed according to vulgar notions, debased origin of one side of the family, which will doubtless suppose itself mortally offended, in the event of such a change, as their being treated coolly, and rejected for their defect of blood, by the full-bred and high-flown aristocracy. This fastidious and absurd conduct, is even actually recommended to the great, by a certain periodical and satyrical Miscellany, pretending to philosophy and morals. As if the whole merits of the question, did not rationally, and according to the rules of common sense, reside in the meritorious conduct of the individuals, whose fault it certainly was not that they were born towards the left hand instead of the right, and who had no more hand in their own illegitimacy than in the colour of their skin. In course, they ought not to be scourged, nor the interests in life, of the Fitzclarences, at all postponed on such account.

It is farther generally supposed, that that the alien act has been, on too many occasions, converted into the engine of private vengeance. I should be very glad of authentic contradictions of the many suspicions and stories of this kind, and particularly of that just related.

The poor musician, who was ruined at Bath some fifty odd or more years ago, for his presumption in this way of courtship, marred his own plea of pity and forbearance in setting an example of revenge, by which he in some sort, merited the punishment of being driven by general neglect from the city, the theatre of his livelihood. The readers of the Sporting Magazine, particularly such as are well stricken in years, will immediately recollect the lovely Mrs. Draper, thus immortalized by her despised and discarded lover—

Oh! the charming Mrs. Draper!
She —— with a sheet of brown paper.

The too ingenious musician, enraged at the rebuff of I believe being turned neck and heels out of doors by the servants, for his insolent pretensions, wrote a copy of verses, of each of which the above line was the termination and chorus; and setting them to a most ludicrous and appropriate tune, sung them with a band before the lady's door. The song and tune of Mrs. Draper, although at present nearly forgotten, were extremely popular in jovial companies during many years, and were often sung to the accompaniment of jarring and uncouth sounds, such as scratching upon a table, or a knife board, and for execution in this kind of melody, a certain tyler in Lambeth Marsh, was famous about thirty years ago, often performing at the White Horse, or Halfpenny Hatch, then the constant rendezvous of Parsons, the comedian—

For I've a Country House at Lambeth Marsh.

TAILORS.

Captain Powlett, and others of that society. After all, it would have been something in the nature of bays in the immortal legend of Mrs. Draper, had her generons forgiveness of the tuneful and witty, but impudent Lothario, been recorded. The poor scraper, fixing his mind upon the natural equality of a two-legged race, really could not brook the dishonour of being shewn out of doors in an unseemly way, and actually preferred his revenge to his bread. I should be glad of the information, Mr. Editor, from some of your numerous correspondents, where I am to look for the original account of the transaction between Mrs. Draper and her music-master, and whether the lady were of the family of rank so named.

Our next anecdote will evince a generous feeling and regard for natural rights, in one sense, in a lady of high property and connexions, although by no means an advocate for the rights of man. I speak of the accomplished and literary widow of the great Brewer, who figured handsomely into the state of holy matrimony with her family dancing-master, and who seems, in her own case, to have judged far more philosophically, as well as feelingly, than her friend and adviser, the aristocratic philosopher, Dr. Johnson. Of the prudence of her choice, she has never seen any reason to doubt. Thus equality of attachment, of prudence, and of moral character, are of far greater consequence in a matrimonial contract, than equality lity of rank or fortune. Listen to the whole of this, ye parents, and do not overlook the first members of the proposition, ye children! I have the honour to be, Sir, &c. &c.

AN OBSERVER OF PASSING EVENTS.

For the Sporting Magazine.

BIOGRAPHY REDUCED TO HER SENSES.

Captain Powlett—Parsons the Comedian, &c.

NOT only the gross partiality of relations and friends, but the still more gross daubing used to promote the trading interests of literature, contribute, too frequently, to render honest and meritorious characters perhaps, absolutely ridiculous in the graves of their proprietors. The easy cullibility of the public, and the glorious uncertainty of detection, however, operate to a perpetual encouragement in this case, as the glorious uncertainty of conviction and of the gallows, does in another; but in both, unhappily, nows and thens, as the Scotch say, murder will out.

I was stimulated to the present exposé, some few years ago, by the appearance of Posthumous Biographical Memoirs, in Heroics, of the two personages above named, but have never found leisure to disburden my oppressed mind until the present time. I shall do so now, prefacing what I have to say of my heroes, with the assurance to the reader, that I speak from my own personal knowledge.

Without any attention to chronology, I will begin with the renowned Captain Powlett, on whom one of the Magazines pronounced a most pompous éloge, for his seamanship, his generosity, courage, patriotism—what not? Indeed, the uninformed reader must have been led away with the notion that the deceased was not only all that, but farther, that he had moved in a respectable rank and habits of life. Who, indeed, could divine the precise truth, through the thick shade of letter-press honours? but which is, that this wretched victim of misplaced eulogy, was an easy, good-tempered, half-witted, and thirsty blackguard, whose connexions and habits of life were in very nearly its lowest walks, and whose intelligence afforded to the fleet, was of that fortuitous kind, which any other seafaring nincompoop, similarly circumstanced, might have afforded also.

Captain Powlett, with what truth I could never ascertain, claimed cousin with the Ducal, or Bolton family. He was a master of some coasting vessel, either fishing or trading, and was fortunate and acute enough, in the accident which involved his future fortune, to postpone the object of his voyage, and come about ship, in order to give Admiral Hawk, as I recollect, intelligence of the sailing of the French fleet, and which proved the successful mean of our Admiral's overtaking and destroying them. For this vigilance and attention, he was very properly rewarded by the Admiralty with a pension of, I know not how many, score pounds per annum. Whether or not he retired instantly from the seafaring profession, I am uninformed, since I knew nothing of him, until I first saw him smoking his pipe at the Halfpenny Hatch, or White

Horse

Horse, Lambeth Marsh, about the year 1779, almost adjoining to which was his wooden dwelling, approached by a bridge of similar materials, across a duck puddle. Here he spent his pension, and enjoyed the otium cum dignitate with his wife, and the aid and solace of tobacco, ale, and jackey, and being occasionally not drunk together, the one was able to assist the other, in case of a fall into the ditch, which was by no means a very rare occurrence. Biographical fidelity, however, requires of me to state the acknowledged fact, that the noble Captain's wife above quoted, was the wife-consort, or resident merely, for she was, in reality, the lawful wife of a black man, then said to be living at one of the out-ports; and the Captain had also a lawful wife then living, and filling the station of a huckster of poultry in Whitechapel, with a legitimate daughter. This lady used occasionally to make the White Horse a scene of confusion, by the hurricane which she raised in the ears of the Captain, and of her rival. But it is time to say, God rest their souls; and it is useful, occasionally, to rake into the ashes of biography, in order to detect those impositions which feed an unprofitable vanity, and to caution the living of the necessity of real and unimpeachable desert, to the attainment of lasting fame.

I wish only to say a few words respecting Parsons. and that by no means with the view to detract from the real, intrinsic merits of his character, which were considerable in his profession, as a representative of the oddities and bizarreries of middling and lower life. My objections only lie against a piece of high-flown biography, rather calculated to burlesque, than to afford an accurate portraiture of the character of the departed comedian. Indeed, I could see nothing in the real living man, of a 'Squire Parsons, adorned with literary attainments, or any remarkable display of the liberal sentiments and manners of a gentleman. He possessed a fund of natural good common sense, and much sagacity, and the whole of this fund he appeared to expend in his improvement in that peculiar walk of his profession, in which his forte lay, and in which consisted his chief reputation. With this view, as well probably as from natural impulse, he spent his life among companions of a very humble order, and his time seems to have been pretty equally divided between the theatre and ——, his country-house at Lambeth Marsh, in very near neighbourhood to the Halfpenny Hatch, where Parsons might often be seen, whiffing his pipe, and quaffing his ale, in company with Captain Powlett and his wife, Tommy Allen, and the rest of the inmates of poor old Judy Glover's rendezvous. Here the glass of Lambeth Marsh ale went merrily round, to the old tune of

With Oratorio Handel,
D'ye think the town will dandle,
Or who will hold a candle?
I care not a farthing who —
Kibby bibby bo!

In all probability, he was then a laudable economist, notwithstanding the suspicion that he must have been previously otherwise, since it was said that his wife, with whom he did not then cohabit, brought him a dowry of five thousand pounds. Parsons, nevertheless, did not regard the wife so much as the portion, and in consequence, substituted, in his old days, a young woman, said to have been his his servant, and by whom I believe he had children; by his lawful wife, none. The latter probably drew from him a sufficient maintenance, since her visits at the White Horse, not unfrequent, were never attended with any unpleasant consequences.

COURT-MARTIAL

On Lieutenant-Colonel BALFOUR, of the Second Dragoons.

Horse Guards, 13th Feb. 1813.

SIR,

HAVING laid before the Prince Regent, the proceedings of a General Court Martial, held at Wakefield on the 7th of January, 1813, and continued by adjournment to the 18th of the same month, for the trial of Colonel Robert Balfour, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2d, or R. N. B. Regiment of Dragoons, who was arraigned upon the under-mentioned charges, viz.:—

"1st. For issuing and publishing in the orderly books of the 2d, or R. N. B. Regiment of Dragoons, a regimental order, bearing date on or about the 20th March, 1811, wherein he authorized and directed William Weir, when regimental Quarter-Master, to supply the Dragoons of the respective troops of the regiment with regimental necessaries, thereby interfering with the duty and responsibility imposed upon the Captains and Officers commanding troops, by the various Regulations and Orders issued by his Majesty and the Commander in Chief, and particularly by the general Regulations and Orders, issued on the 1st November, 1804.

"2d. For having continually since the issue of the regimental Order of the 20th March, 1811, and by means thereof, knowingly permitted the said Wm. Weir, the regimental Quarter-Master, to make exorbitant charges on the several articles of regimental necessaries and equipment furnished by him to the dragoons of the regiment, and knowingly allowed the said Wm. Weir to derive an unwarrantable and illegal profit, out of the prices at which the said articles, or many of them, were by him furnished to the regiment, or conniving at his so doing, in direct violation of the above Regulations and Orders, and particularly of those issued on the 1st November, 1804; and such conduct being highly detrimental and injurious to his Majesty's service, in violation of the trust reposed in him as the Commanding Officer of the 2d, or R. N. B. regiment of dragoons, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline."

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

The Court having most seriously and attentively, and with great deliberation, weighed and considered the whole and every part of the evidence that has been brought forward in support of the prosecution against the prisoner Colonel Robert Balfour, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2d, or R. N. B. regiment of dragoons, together with his defence, and the evidence in support thereof, is of opinion that he, Colonel Robert Balfour, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2d, or R. N. B. regiment of dragoons, is Guilty of the first charge.

The Court is also of opinion, that he, Colonel Balfour, is Guilty of the second charge, which being breaches of the Articles of War, the Court, in consequence, sentence him, him, the said Colonel Robert Balfour, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 2d, or R. N. B. regiment of dragoons, to be Cashiered.

I am to acquaint you, that the Prince Regent is pleased, in the name and on the behalf of his Majesty, to approve and confirm the finding and sentence of the Court; but his Royal Highness was at the same time pleased to command me to explain, that upon neither of the charges does there appear upon the face of the proceedings any thing to impute dishonourable or unworthy motives to Colonel Balfour, and that in exonerating the prisoner from any unworthy imputation, connected with the Regimental Order, specified in the charges, such a favourable view of the case has its origin in the following considerations, viz.

That although upon minute investigation, the order he issued has been found inconsistent with the declared Regulations, adduced on the face of the proceedings, that Colonel Balfour was misled by misconstruction of the real meaning of these Regulations. That his absence on leave, in consequence of ill health for many months, precluded his exerting the same watchfulness over the execution of his Orders, as he otherwise might have done. That no representations having been made to him from the other Officers of the regiment, (some of whom exercised the command) during his absence, seems to have induced him to believe, that the regimental arrangement which he had authorised for the provision of necessaries, had in fact been beneficial in its effects; and that in consequence of his illness, and also of not having been apprised of any complaints during his absence, Colonel Balfour was ignorant of the different articles having been over-charged by Quarter-Master Weir, to the detriment of the men.

Under all these circumstances his Royal Highness was pleased to consider, that a full distinction exists to the honour and advantage of Colonel Balfour, between the abuse of the authority vested in the Quarter Master, who has been convicted of undue profits upon the sale of necessaries, and the motives by which the Colonel appears upon the face of the proceedings, to have been actuated in granting that authority.

Upon the whole of these grounds therefore, and taking into consideration the length of Colonel Balfour's services, and the respectability of his character, the Prince Regent was graciously pleased to consider him a fit object for Royal clemency, and to command that he should be restored to the functions of his Commission.

His Royal Highness was further pleased to command, that in explaining the grounds of remitting the sentence passed upon the prisoner, he Colonel Balfour should be severely reprimanded in his Royal Highness's name, and admonished to be more attentively observant in future of the rules and regulations of the service.—I am, Sir, your's, &c.

(Signed) FREDERICK,
Commander in Chief.

SENDING ENGLISH CART HORSES TO MOROCCO.

THE Emperor of Morocco has, through his Ambassador in this country, requested that a few cart horses of the English breed, might be sent to him for his stud, at Mequinez; quinez; Mr. Harman Dysen, of Park-lane, has been commissioned to select some of the best that can be procured, and they will, it is reported, shortly set off for their destination, under the care of a farrier and several of the Life Guards.

The following is understood to be a translation of the letter received by the Prince Regent, from the Emperor of Morocco:

"Praise be to God, who is merciful and just.

"There is no God, but God, and Mahomet is his prophet.

"There is no strength, but in God.

"Peace be unto thee, Prince of the West, Sovereign of the Isles of England! We desire thy friendship.

"We have felt joy at hearing of thy health and prosperity. We are also well. May we both prosper.

"We have heard of the warlike exploits of thy renowned servant in Spain, who has reduced thy enemies to dust. May he thrive, and serve thee well!

"We hate the craftiness and conquering ambition of the Franks. It has given us joy to hear that thy servant has crushed them.

"We are breeding horses in our stud at Mequinez. The horses of my kingdom are nimble and swift, like the fleetness of the wind. They tell us, that the horses in thy islands are strong, and very large; well suited for beasts of draught. It would please me well to have some for my stud. Prince, can'st thou fulfil our wishes? We will be grateful to thee. If not, we will not be offended.

"Muley Abdallah, our faithful servant, will carry this message, and deliver it to thee, in thy royal residence. Treat him well, and let him repose from his journey; and when thou hast reflected on the contents of this letter, send him back unto us with thy reply.

"Mequinez, 26 of the Dsoul Hhedjch of the Hegira, 1227. (31 Dec. 1812.)

HORSE-STEALERS AND POACHERS.

THE enormous prices which, from a variety of causes, good horses now fetch, present to the unprincipled such temptations for stealing them, that we cannot feel much surprise at so great a number of offenders having been convicted, at the several Assizes now holding, for this particular crime.—No less than six received sentence of death at Maidstone, two at Chelmsford, one at Cambridge, and in other counties the number, we believe, has been fully proportionate.—Of poachers likewise, there has been no scarcity. Two of this nefarious breed have been brought to justice, whose cases are worth relating, although the offences for which they have been convicted, were not exactly in their old line of business.

At the YORK ASSIZES, Snowdon Dunhill was tried and convicted of stealing corn from the barn of a farmer, and sentenced to be transported for seven years. For the space of nearly eighteen years, this man had carried on his depredations upon the farmers around the country, to such an extent, that he had become the terror of the whole neighbourhood; and had organized a band of plunderers under him, like a second Jonathan Wild,

Wild, who used to rob as he directed them He originally started as a poacher: as he was brought before Major Topham about nineteen years ago, it seems, for destroying game, and was removed by him from Wharram in the Street, to the place of his late residence, from whence all his later and more serious depredations have been committed. As a proof of the dread in which the farmers held him, the following anecdote is mentioned:—A farmer, whose barn had been frequently robbed, employed some men to watch, and discovered a person taking away a sack of beans, who made his escape, leaving his plunder by the barn door. Some little time afterwards, Snowdon Dunhill came to buy some oats of him, agreeing to pay for them at a certain time. On the day appointed, Snowdon Dunhill appeared, and on looking at the farmer's account, very coolly said—" Yes, it is right enough; but if you remember, at such a time you took some beans of mine, and the difference I am come to pay you." The farmer was so much intimidated, that he allowed him to charge his own beans that were saved from being stolen, and took the balance very quietly. Though a labourer, and with a family of five or six children, he supported two horses and his family without any visible means of livelihood, on the depredations he committed on the country.—When his premises were searched, a pistol and skeleton keys for opening all kinds of locks, were found concealed. He was a very powerful, athletic man, in point of person, and the farmers were so much in dread of him, that it was with difficulty they could be brought to utter any thing against him, lest he might (as they expressed it), " do them a secret mischief."

At the Essex Assizes, William Church was tried for sending an anonymous letter, on the 2d of August, 1812, to Thomas Hall, Esq. Town Clerk of Saffron Walden, threatening to kill and murder him. The Counsel stated this as an extraordinary and uncommon case, which could be proved only by evidence of the hand-writing of the prisoner. Mr. Hall, Mr. Walton, and another, were sworn to the hand-writing of the prisoner, in the letter which depicted the prosecutor an attorney at law, as a bloody rogue, and one of four persons that were destined to be murdered, like the late Prime Minister, and advising him to prepare for death, by a musket ball, with a variety of low and vulgar aspersions, indicating gross ignorance of composition, connexion, or even common spelling in the writer. The post-mark of Stratford was upon the letter. The alledged cause of the letter was a process sued out by the prosecutor, as agent to Lord Braybrook, against a son of the prisoner, for poaching on his Lordship's manor, by issuing a writ without first citing the accused before a Magistrate by summons. The Counsel for the prisoner took objection to the evidence, upon the belief of the prisoner's hand-writing, as also the fact of the letter coming from him to the prosecutor, but the objections were over-ruled by the learned Judge.—The Jury, after some deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty, accompanied with a strong recommendation to mercy, in which the prosecutor earnestly and humanely joined, having only discharged his duty by carrying on the prosecution. He was afterwards reprieved.

NATURAL HISTORY OF THE ORKNEY ISLANDS.

THE SHORT-EARED OWL.

THIS bird I shot in the hills of Hoy, where it is very frequent, and builds its nest among the heath.—It is impudent in breeding-time, sometimes catching up chickens from the doors. I have likewise seen it in chase of pigeons in day-light, which is not ordinary with the owl kind. In a nest I found in Hoy were the remains of a moor fowl, two plovers, besides the feet of several others, and the birds, two in number, ready to fly; the nest was in a large heath-bush, made without any art; intolerably fetid, by reason of the heat of the weather, which had putrified some part of the provisions; and which was still increased by the dung, &c. of the birds, which the parents did not seem so attentive to remove as I have observed the smaller birds upon such occasions. The description of this bird is as follows:

The length of this bird was thirteen inches, the breadth three feet; the weight, ten ounces and a half: the bill strong, and much hooked, of a blackish horn-colour, almost buried amongst a set of white bristly feathers; the eyes large and full; the irides a most beautiful colour, commonly yellow; the pupil large, with a nictitating membrane; the eyelids covered with black bristles, round them a circle of white, mixed with tawny; the crown of the head brown, variegated with lighter colours.—Above each eye stood a single feather, taller than the rest, the half of which, (or one web) was black and the other white. While the bird lived, and was suddenly startled, it would erect these like small horns, and fall a hissing like a cat; but the horns were scarce discernable when it died, unless to a nice inspection, in which it would be seen that they covered more of their neighbours than they ought. The ears were surprisingly large, opening from the neck to the throat, surrounded with a set of small parti-coloured feathers. The back of the head was covered with brownish feathers, edged with grayish yellow; the back and coverts are brownish, edged with a dull yellow. The legs, to the nails, are covered with whitish yellow feathers; the quills are dusky, barred with red, the second feather serrated; the tail brown and spotted; the breast and belly a dirty yellow.

THE RAVEN.

IN the winter and spring vast flocks of corbies are seen here, but are very wild; when breeding-time draws near they grow much thinner, many of them, I suppose, going off to other countries to breed. However, many continue here the whole year, as the country people, who live in the more hilly parts, daily experience to their loss; for in the time of hatching, and when the young flight are out, the parents become very impudent and voracious; then lambs, pigs, and chickens, are destroyed in numbers; and though the corby has not strength to carry away a lamb or pig, yet it tears out their eyes, entrails, and what it can manage.

The bill and claws of this bird are very strong, the latter much hooked. The colour is black, with a fine gloss; the legs black, as are all the larger feathers; the belly dusky.

The

The quill-feathers make excellent writing-pens, are very strong and elastic, and last long.

In hard winters the raven comes nearer the towns than usual for such a shy bird; then he is frequently seen by the shores, and even within a stone's-throw of the houses of Stromness, picking up what garbage, &c. he can find, but retires from us at the return of spring, and betakes himself to the precipices of the hills and rocks, and sometimes to the steeples of the churches, or any ruined building, and there he makes his summer's retreat, levying contributions on all around; far from so generous in this respect as our country-folks say of the eagle, who, (they tell us) takes but a hen from every house of the parish, and none from those in the neighbourhood of his royal nest.

Ravens have been sometimes seen white, and though this is but seldom the case, I have heard of two or three examples, both in these and rooks, though not all in Orkney: of the latter it was impossible, as they are seldom, if ever, seen here.

THE STARE.

This is a harmless, prattling, mimic bird, found in thousands in the Orkneys; breeds in old houses, churches, the sea-rocks, &c.; seems to be a favourite in Orkney, as few houses are built but they leave several holes in the wall for its convenience, of which it always, as if sensible of the favour, avails itself, and repays it with a song, and a deal of its antic mimicry.

I have often been much diverted to hear a couple of cock stares, perched upon two opposite chimneys, trying to excel one another in imitating all the noises below, the crowing of cocks, cackle of hens, barking of dogs, mewing of cats, particular notes of different wild birds; all this intermixed with its own natural harsh discordant squeak; insomuch, that a macaroni from every nation in Europe, placed together to dispute concerning some important alteration to be made on a button-hole, or the best method of scenting a bouquet, could not make a more dissonant jangle than these birds, when in the humour of mimicry.

The stare feeds on worms and insects, and in winter, when the earth is locked up with frost, comes down to the sea side, where it lives on the sea-louse, (as it is here called), insinuating the point of its bill under the stones, and hastily opening it, jerks the stone over, immediately seizing what may be underneath.

The flesh of the stare is very bitter, but this may in some measure be remedied, by wringing off the head of the bird immediately as caught, that the blood, in which the bad taste is, may run from it. Young stares are tolerable eating.

This bird is well known, and as well described in Mr. Pennant's British Zoology, a book in so many hands, as to render a particular description here unnecessary, only I shall observe, that the young birds do not acquire their perfect colours for the first year, but are of an uniform dusky brown, with a yellowish stripe running from the lower jaw down to the breast; and, besides, may be known by their particular note. I have heard of one example of a stare, in the nest of which there were four young, two of which were black, the others grey, and grew whiter as they grew older.

I imagine

I imagine stares breed twice a-year, as the first brood has left the nest now in June, and I have observed them very busy in repairing their nests, and rearing another in August.

THE SEA-PIE.

This bird is found on our rocky coasts, where it lives on the limpet, and other shell-fish. It continues with us the whole year, and builds here.

The bill is most excellently contrived to procure its living; it is long, strong, and compressed sidewise, so that if it finds a limpet but a little way from the rock, it easily insinuates its bill between the shell and the rock, and brings it off in a moment. If the limpet is on its guard, and more firmly fastened, it knocks it off as dextrously as any fisherman when he wants it to bait his line.

It is sometimes eaten, but the flesh is very mild, has much the taste of limpets, its food, which makes it not much sought after.

The colours of this bird, though few, are good, and their mixture produces a good effect. The head, neck, back, and part of the coverts are a fine full black, in some birds (cocks, I suppose), with a cast of green; the edges of the eyelids, and the irides, are a fine red; part of the breast, the belly, and the rump, are white; the lower part of the tail is white, and the upper black. The quill-feathers are curiously marked with white from the three outermost, where it prevails least, but gradually encroaching, seizes the whole of the innermost; the legs and feet are flesh-coloured, rather clumsily made; the toes broad, and the outermost of these connected by a membrane, which is of excellent use to hinder these birds from sinking into the sand; the claws are dusky, short, and seemingly much worn by continually scrambling about the rocks in search of its limpet food.

The sea-pie is at very little pains about its nest; a hollow of the next rock, or between two stones, with an artificial hollow scraped by itself, lined with a few bits of grass, or sometimes with her own dung, serves the purpose. On this, or often on the bare rock, she lays four eggs, of an olive colour, spotted with darker blotches of the same.

RISING AT A LEAP.

To face this page, we present to our readers another Etching of Mr. Howitt's, on the subject of Hunting, and trust our friends will not consider it inferior to the former productions of this artist, given in the course of our Magazine.

LAW CASE.—SHOOTING POINTERS.

At the late Northampton Assizes, an action was tried, James Robinson, Esq. plaintiff, v. Lord Lilford, defendant, which had created considerable anxiety in the sporting world. It was brought by the plaintiff, who is a qualified man, against the Noble Lord, for shooting a brace of pointers, the property of the plaintiff, as they were returning from chasing a hare, which had run into the defendant's estate. The Noble Lord suffered judgment to go by default, consequently it was decided before the Sheriff and his Jury, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff of 80l. and costs.

FEAST OF WIT.

THE celebrated Foote, in the early part of his dramatic life, being in the West, his native country, was invited to dinner, at the house of an opulent and most hospitable farmer. In the discourse over the bottle, Master Jacky, a pert, forward, spoilt child, particularly noticed the words literary men, used by Foote, and desired, with much importunity, to know what literary men were. "My dear boy," replied Foote, "they are so called, because they have generally nothing else to lie upon but litter."

JENKINS, a tall Bank Clerk, near seven feet high, who died a few years ago, happening to be in a crowd at a fire, trod upon the toes of a little man standing near him, who writhing with the pain, did not scruple to abuse him in pretty loud terms, for his weight and clumsiness. Jenkins, however, instead of making an excuse for what he had done, contented himself with merely replying, "What's that noise I hear BELOW?"

THE following is a literal copy of a note sent to the Clerk of a parish church in Gloucester:—"Mister my wief is ded, and wants to be berrid, dig a griefe for her, and she shall cum and be berrid to morrer at wonner clock. You knows where to dig it, close by my other wife; but let it be dip."

AT the late delivery of the Constables' Lists for the Militia, the following curious and extraordinary return was made in the parish of Sedgley, in Staffordshire:—Joseph Fellows, aged 70: number of children by the first wife, ten—by second, thirteen—by the third, four—by the fourth, four—and Jack in the box."

INSCRIPTION on a tomb-stone in Lexington, Kentucky, over Andrew M'Farlane, an emigrant from the Isle of Sky, Scotland:

Tho' lowly here beneath a sod I lie,
Know, reader, once I march'd above the Sky—
Sky born, Sky-taught, Sky-nurtur'd, and Sky-bred,
On Sky I trampled, and on Sky I fed.
Ixion, as the poets sing aloud,
Walk'd through the sky and kiss'd a female cloud;
They lie! Were I alive, I'd make it good—
The Sky-nurs'd females are sonnd flesh and blood.
Oh! were we now beneath the reign of Jove,
Juno or Pallas, or the Queen of Love,
Some pow'r, who from the Sky deriv'd his birth,
Would raise his brother from this Yankee earth!

ST. DAVID'S DAY.—The following hoax is given in an early work, as entitled to credit:—A wit of Bath, named Tom G. had a neighbour, who possessed a small bit of garden ground, and was very fond of amusing himself in it. On going one afternoon into his garden, and and seeing his neighbour hastily employed in cultivating a patch with onion seed—"What," said G. "I thought thou hadst known better than to sow onions on this day;—thou fool of a fellow;—dost recollect it's the first of March, St. David's day, and that all onion-seed sown on that day will produce leeks?" 'Oh! Master G. that's only a bit of your fun.' "My fun! why I thought every child knew it; and I'll bet thee a leg of mutton and trimmings that thou has'n't a single onion there—they'll be all turned into leeks!"—The bet was mutually agreed to. G. being a much earlier riser than his neighbour, had, before the latter made his appearance the next morning, removed every particle of mould, where the onions had been sown, into his own garden; a quantity of leek-seed being substituted, and the ground nicely raked and dressed again, the man had not the slightest idea of deception; but, in due time, to his astonishment, leeks made their appearance! G. now reminded him of his wager, to the payment of which the other assented; and they, with a few friends, happily partook of the produce of it at the old Cross Keys; the man firmly believing that this transmutation was entirely owing to the cause which G. had assigned, and swearing that in future he should remember the 1st of March and that cunning magician, St. David, who had thus turned a bed of onions into a bed of leeks.

A TRAVELLER coming late to an Inn, and the beds all full, supplicated the landlord to find him some place of rest. After much hesitation, the latter told him he had a room with two beds in it, but in one of them lay a woman, and if he (the traveller), would promise upon his honour not to speak to the lady, he might sleep in the unoccupied bed; a solemn promise was given, and the traveller repaired to bed. But in the course of the night, he could not refrain from thinking of the woman and speaking—first it was "Madam," in a low tone of voice—next, "Madam," a little louder—and at last, "Madam," still louder.—At length receiving no answer, he concluded, that "silence gave consent;" and he went to the lady's bed, where, to his great mortification, he found therein a dead woman. Coming down in the morning, he began to upbraid his host for putting him in a room with a dead woman. "Had you kept your word with me," replied the landlord, "you would not have known whether the woman had been dead or alive; if you feel yourself aggrieved, you have to thank yourself, and deserve the usage you have met with, by the violation of your promise."

A RESPECTABLE auctioneer, who had for a few weeks been engaged in selling linen-drapery goods, on a Saturday evening, lately ran from the rostrum to make his market. His mind being still professionally engaged, he enquired of a butcher, (whose meat happened to be very thin), "what do you ask a yard for your beef?" Cleaver answered, "that he always sold the meat by the pound." "I ask pardon," replied the Knight of the Hammer, "but I really took your beef for muslin."

A NEW race-course has been planned out and nearly finished, at Nottingham, under the inspection of many noblemen and gentlemen in that neighbourhood.

A SPREAD-EAGLE.—On Saturday, the 20th instant, was decided a sporting wager, between six gentlemen, (three being chosen on each side) who should be nearest to Sir M. M. Sykes's fox-hounds. A great deal of money was betted on the occasion, and a very great interest naturally excited. The Hon. Mr. Hawke, Mr. Treacher, and Captain Smith, of the 10th Hussars, were on the one party; and Mr. Lloyd, of York, Mr. Stanley, brother of Sir Thomas Stanley, and Mr. Blundell, of Lancashire, on the other. The latter trio considerably the favourites at starting. The hounds found in Suet Carr, and went away in their usual most excellent and rapid manner, running a burst as severe and as killing for the pace, (and over the deepest and strongest inclosed country in Yorkshire), as was ever known by the oldest huntsman—passing an extent of five miles of country in a twenty minutes burst, and after that going a steady rating pace for another half hour. The gentlemen named above came in as follows:—Mr. Treacher, on Old Nick, first; Hon. Mr. Hawke, on Lord of the Valley, second; Captain Smith, on Jerry Sneak, third; Mr. Stanley, on Neck-or-Nothing, fourth; Mr. Blundell, on Rolla, fifth; and Mr. Lloyd, on the York Dandy, sixth. It is needless to add, that the wager was won by the three first-named gentlemen. What is remarkable, Captain Smith met with a severe fall at his second fence, and Mr. Hawke rode after and caught his horse, brought him back, and then made up his ground in the burst, though he rides above 14st.—Sir M. M. Sykes's hounds have had uncommon sport throughout the season, and go at such a pace, that nothing but very fast horses can live with them; indeed we need not be surprised at their excellence, when we recollect that they are hunted by that most excellent sportsman and beautiful horseman, William Carter—and long may he live to enjoy their excellence, exclaims every one who hunts with them.

At the late Louth Course Meeting, Mr. Adam Eve made a bet of 50gs. p. p. that his grey mare should go thirty-four miles in two successive hours; and we understand it is to be determined over Doncaster race course in April.

At the Lincoln Assizes, an action was brought (Bond plaintiff, Grice defendant) to recover the price of a horse originally belonging to the plaintiff. The parties are farmers at Holton le Clay, who, on their way to Louth, on the 18th of last April, after some chaffering and jockeyship, bargained to swap horses, each warranting his beast as sound. The plaintiff warranted his mare as sound in wind and limb, but it turned out that she was swung or strained in the back, and the plea, which her owner set up in defence when challenged for his imposition was, that the back was not a limb! The mare was returned, but the plaintiff having refused to receive her, she was impounded and sold for 16l. 16s.—The Jury gave a verdict for plaintiff, subject to award.

A fatal accident happened last month to Ferdinand Bullock, Esq. of Wantage, Berks:—He had been out fox-hunting, and dined with a party, but on his return home, he by some means got from off his horse into a ditch, and was found in the morning dead, standing upright in the water. This is the same gentleman who some time since broke his thigh at Stockbridge Races.

A few nights ago, as Thomas Johnson, a labouring man, of North Chapel, Sussex, was out shooting pheasants, in Michel Park, belonging to the Earl of Egremont, his gun burst, and shattered his hand so dreadfully, that he died shortly after from the loss of blood. Let this be a warning to poachers.

Cocking.—The main of cocks fought at the Close Pit, in St. John-street, Chester, between the gentlemen of Cheshire and Shropshire, was won by the former, six mains out of ten—the byes even.

A cock-fight took place this month, at Henfield, between Sussex and Kent, which lasted four days, and terminated in favour of the latter.

A pigeon-match took place, on Monday, the 1st instant, on Helston ston Common, between Mr. King, a good shot, and Smart, a keeper, for 25 guineas a-side, at 21 birds. Mr. King killed 18, and his adversary 17.

A SUBSCRIPTION pigeon match took place on Midgham Common, Bucks, on the 15th inst. ten guineas each, half forfeit. Ten gentlemen shot at eleven birds each. The three best shots were Messrs. Keene, Gilbert, and Croft, who killing all their birds, they shot off their ties, and Mr. Keene won.

THURSDAY, the 18th instant, a trotting match took place at Eccles, between Mr. Mapes's noted mare Brown Bags, and Mr. Maplestone's bay mare Frisky, which was won by the former. They trotted ten miles on the Lowestoft road, and performed it with ease in forty-four minutes, Mr. Mapes's mare carrying 13 stone.

ON Friday morning, the 26th ult. a long-pending trotting match between a black mare belonging to Mr. Crisp, of Stow, near Downham Market, Suffolk, and a bay mare, the property of Mr. Brett, of Fordham, near Hilgay, took place on the turnpike-road from the Chequer Inn, Downham, to the Toll-bar at Fincham. This match was for twenty pounds a-side, and was won by the former, distancing the bay mare upwards of a furlong, the latter having broke eleven times during the performance of her journey. The black mare (which on the day of the match was rode by Mr. Abraham Spinks, of Magdalen) trotted over the ground, on the Wednesday preceeding, in seventeen minutes.

PEDESTRIANISM.—Mr. Yeoman, an Oxfordshire farmer, started on Monday, the 1st instant, to perform sixty miles a day, for six successive days, or rather three hundred and sixty miles in the six days. On the first day he performed sixty-four miles, with six hours rest; second day, sixty-five miles, with six hours rest; third day, sixty-seven miles, with five hours rest. Of the fourth and fifth days we have no particulars; but he completed his task at eleven o'clock on the Saturday night, six miles from Basingstoke, Hants. He rose each day about four in the morning, and travelled at the rate of something more than four miles an hour. His legs inclined to swell on the third day. At the finishing of the undertaking he was reduced two stone, his legs much swollen, and altogether in a deplorable state. Nothing but determined resolution could have enabled him to win the match. He was not expected to proceed after the Friday, and was sixteen hours doing forty-seven miles the last day.

On Thursday, the 4th instant, Mr. Jameson performed a task of one mile and a half in seven minutes, on the Kilburn road. The match was for twenty guineas. At starting, bets were two to one against the performance.

Saturday, the 13th instant, at twelve o'clock in the morning, Henry Hammond, of Lilley-lane, near Huddersfield, Yorkshire, started for a wager of twenty guineas, to go eighty miles in eighteen hours. He performed the distance in seventeen hours and a quarter, with apparent ease—so much that he challenged any man on the ground to go twenty miles more for twenty guineas immediately, but no one ventured to accept the offer. What makes this performance the more remarkable is, that it was undertaken without any previous training or preparation whatever. Sir J. L. Kaye, near whose seat the road lies, paid every attention to the pedestrian during his arduous performance.

A coachman, of the name of Young, undertook on Tuesday, the 23d instant, for a wager of forty guineas, to go from Westminster to Teddington, Middlesex, and return, the whole being twenty-two miles, in three hours. He performed eight miles in the first hour, and fourteen within the next two hours, and won the match with great ease.

On Thursday, the 25th instant, the celebrated Lancashire pedestrian, Abraham Wood, ran the distance of nine miles and a half, over Knavesmire, York, in fifty-four minutes forty-five seconds, which was five minutes fifteen seconds within the time he undertook for a wager of thirty guineas, to run the distance. The following is a correct statement of the time he was running each mile:—

	Min.	Sec.
1st mile	5	7
2d ditto	5	21
3d ditto	5	30
4th ditto	5	30
5th ditto	5	32
6th ditto	5	44
7th ditto	6	35
8th ditto	5	16
9th ditto	6	0
½ ditto	4	9
	54	45

At starting, betting was six to four in favour of Wood, and when he had run six miles it was six to one on him.

A MATCH of back-sword, or single-stick, was played on Friday, the 19th instant, in the Fountain Inn yard, Chichester, for what is technically termed Love and a Belly-full. The competitors were Wheeler, of Sidlesham, and Millington, alias the Muff, of Lavant. The Muff won. This match has created a subscription for a hat and purse at Goodwood, which, as the play has declined at Botley, will probably induce the players of the Western Counties to try their skill in this quarter. The subscriptions will, apparently, be worth travelling for.

PUGILISM.—Molineux the black, and Carter, who was beat by Power, at Rickmansworth, were matched to fight on the 2d of April, within twenty miles of Oxford, in a twenty-feet ring, for 100 guineas; but the match is off, to the no small disappointment of thousands, the Black having been arrested by Richmond, for 150l.

A battle between Jay and Fuller will take place Tuesday, the 6th of April, within 20 miles of London. Jay won the last battle, and is the favourite.

A boxing match, for twenty-five guineas and a purse of ten pounds, took place on Monday the 1st instant, on Hatfield Common, Hants, between George Cranstone, a descendant of Slack, and Roger Whitfield, a sort of teacher of science, and a formidable boxer, who was backed by Captain Hans. The latter gave a stone, but was still the favourite. Whitfield shewed off about the head of his antagonist in the first round, by hitting and breaking with great skill, and he at length knocked his formidable adversary down, after four minutes fighting. The superiority was maintained by Whitfield's science about half an hour, but but he had received some lounging hits too forcible to be parried. He at length fell off, from fatigue, and the time arrived, when weight more than overbalanced science, and some desperate rallying took place. Cranstone now gained an ascendancy, which Whitfield could not arrest. The former bored in, and used both hands with great effect, and after fifty minutes hard fighting, victory was declared in his favour, by planting a blow on the side of Whitfeld's head, which stunned him for several minutes, and thus fell the glory of one who had subdued—not the continent—but the county in which he lived.

Power had a benefit at the Fives Court, St. Martin's-lane, Wednesday, the 17th instant, in commemoration of his victory at Rickmansworth, which was attended by most of the amateurs in London, and might be termed a bumper. There was some very good setting-to betwixt Crib, the champion, and Carter, the former of whom exhibited on this occasion to make up for the loss of Power, who was too ill to spar. There was also a good match betwixt Richman and Carter, and in both much science was displayed. Ford also gave strong specimens of improvement in a set-to with Harmer, and amongst others deserving notice, was the match betwixt Sam and Cropley. Fuller and Jay also exhibited.

A very hard battle of sixty-five rounds, which lasted one hour and a quarter, took place on Monday, the 8th instant, in Crendon Meadow, Oxon, between Thomas Jones, of Thame, and Thomas Elms, of Shabington, for a pound note (a sum of importance to both parties), and both being good bottom, neither would yield till the spectators insisted on their being separated, as bets were even from the beginning to the end.—Jones was much smaller, but displayed science adequate to his adversary's hard blows.

A pitched battle took place on Wednesday morning, the 3d instant, in Harper's-fields, between Bob Redhead, of bruising celebrity, and —— Hall, a waggoner, of Feversham. They set to at seven o'clock, with determined resolution, and fought for forty minutes. Both combatants were shockingly lacerated about the face, and the latter was nearly blinded of his right eye, besides suffering very considerably from body blows. The former came off victor.

A severe pitched battle was fought on Malton Range, Hertfordshire, on Tuesday, the 2d instant, for a stake of twenty guineas, betwixt Thomas Hancock, a navigator, and Benjamin Barnes, a young farmer, and a sort of terror in the neighbourhood. The navigator was a descendant of the Kingswood breed, which has produced so many British champions, and was a natural good fighter of twelve stone, and possessed much courage and hardihood. Barnes, by practice, had acquired a portion of science sufficient to stop and return upon many heavy hits, and this superiority gave him the lead in the former part of the battle.—Much injury was sustained by both in the second round, and at the end of the eighth the four eyes were closed. In this situation they continued the battle with increased obstinacy, if possible; the lance having been applied, and together with being cut by the fist, they obtained temporary sight. The battle lasted three quarters of an hour, hour, and both went down together from fatigue in the latter part of the combat. At the suggestion of the backers the battle was drawn, to be decided on a future day, as the men were alike beat, and being so much exhausted, it was an even thing at the draw. Thirty pounds was divided betwixt the combatants: and the battle will be renewed for a great stake.

THERE is now living in the parish of Tresham, near Chudleigh, a lamb, about three weeks old, suckled from the day of its birth by a sheep-dog bitch. The ewe having died, the owner brought home the lamb, with an intention to have it reared by hand; this trouble was saved through the spontaneous offer of the bitch, whose litter had that morning been destroyed. It is a firm, thriving lamb, and follows its nurse as its mother.

To the Sporting World!—Mr. Dawe, of Dorchester, in the county of Dorset, has for nearly five years past been in possession of a real Newfoundlander, whose astonishing powers in the watery element are allowed by connoisseurs to almost surpass belief, and beggar all description. During a late visit at Exeter, an elegant couplet of verses, composed by no contemptible hand (on seeing the wonderful dexterity and resolution of the dog Cæsar in the canal), appeared in print: Mr. Dawe has been induced, from a motive as much to gratify the curiosity of his sporting friends as to pay a fair tribute to the abilities of his dog, conceiving that this Trifle is not less true because poetical, to get them printed and generally circulated, under an impression that it might please. Mr. Dawe has publicly and privately expressed his wish to accommodate any sporting gentleman (for he considers every man a sportsman) with the propagation of this canine wonder! Malevolence, ever on the watch! lurking in the breast of the niggard, to whom a few pence is of more value than sterling wit, or honest ambition, shrinks at the sound of POSTAGE! Let such bethink him of his sordid pelf, and scoul at Cæsar's laurels! for Cæsar has some laurels! but Cæsar nor cares for him, nor such as are belike him.—Whoever this cap fits, may wear it!—Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung!!—Sherborne Journal.

As Mr. Good, a respectable farmer, was looking in his fields for a hare, at Berwick St. James, near Sarum, he saw an owl flying very low, at a distance. The greyhounds seeing it, followed, and after running a great way, and often jumping at the bird, poor Peter was caught by the talons, and pulled to the earth.

A CURIOUS trial took place on Friday, the 25th ult. in the Court of King's Bench, Dublin, respecting a pointer dog, in which the Rev. Mr. Baker was plaintiff, and Mr. Eustace, pay clerk of the works at Howth, defendant. The witnesses on the part of the plaintiff, were Captain Shanley, the Rev. Thomas Baker, brother-in-law of the plaintiff, and Pat. Dolan, formerly servant of the plaintiff, all of whom proved the identity of the dog, who, as further evidence, was produced on the table, to the great merriment of the Court, who were convulsed with laughter at this unusual witness's testitestimony. On the part of the defendant, Mr. John Grace, of the Queen's County, Mr. Benjamin Darley, and Mr. Macpherson, of Abbey-street, were produced.—The Jury, without retiring from the box, gave a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 30l. and 6d. costs.

DURING the fall of snow at Martinmas last, many persons, on the heights of Middlebie and Tundergarth, and along the upper heights of Langholm and Westerkirk, observed the tracks of two animals, supposed to be foxes, which the good people of Middlebie charged with the loss of their poultry, as few nights passed without some of them disappearing. Some days ago, however, a person passing betwixt Westwater and Cruive, came upon the tracks, differing only in size, the largest of which he followed, until he came to the mouth of a hole, which he supposed to be the robber's retreat. Contented with his discovery, he returned home, and next morning himself and another person proceeded to the spot, and having got the assissance of several others, with fowling pieces and dogs, they commenced digging up a drain, where the object of their pursuit had concealed himself. Here the gentleman showed them his ugly face, and was fired upon, but without effect. A shepherd present put in his dog, which caused the animal immediately to spring from his hole, when, to the great astonishment of the beholders, he proved to be a wild cat, of a most extraordinary size. The following are the dimensions :—from the tail to the tip of the nose, three feet nine inches; tail, twelve inches; circumference at the shoulders, twelve inches; circumference at the head, fourteen inches; and of the tail, four inches and a quarter; colour a dark grey, with black stripes.—(Greenock Advertiser.)

TRAVELLING on the frontiers of Gallicia and Hungary has this winter been very dangerous, in consequence of the numerous bands of wolves with which they were infested. From the great increase of these ravenous animals, in the above countries, they are supposed to have come from Poland and Russia, where the war and the report of cannon had made them take flight. To destroy them, general hunting matches have been appointed.

ABOUT three months ago, a horse, rising three years old, the property of Mr. Alexander Guthrie, in Findowrie, near Brechin, Scotland, received a hurt which ultimately shut up the urinary passage. C. Black, farrier in Brechin, being called in, made several attempts, in the ordinary way, to get the stoppage removed, all of which proved ineffectual. From the certainty that the horse could not survive long, unless immediate relief was procured, he resolved to make an incision into the uretha; this was accordingly done, externally about three inches long, commencing immediately below the fundament, and cut into the urethra close to the neck of the bladder. The operation had not been performed above two minutes, when the animal discharged an immense quantity of urine by the artificial passage, and began to eat, neither of which it had done for several days. The passage is perfectly open, and now whole on both sides; the animal continues to discharge its urine regularly, gularly, is perfectly well in every respect, and thriving as well as any in the country.

MIGRATION OF SWALLOWS.—Swallows have been seen so late as the latter end of October; and indeed some assert that they have been seen till near Christmas. Mr. White, in his Natural History of Selborne, mentions having seen a house martin flying about in November, long after the general migration had taken place. Many more instances might be given of such late appearances, which, added to the well-authenticated accounts of swallows having been actually found in a torpid state, leaves us no room to doubt, that such young birds as were hatched late, and consequently not strong enough to undertake a long voyage to the coast of Africa, are left behind, and remain concealed in hiding places till the return of spring: on the other hand, that actual migrations of the swallow tribe do take place, has been fully proved from a variety of well-attested facts, most of which are taken from the observations of navigators who were eye-witnesses of the flights, and whose ships have sometimes afforded a resting place to the weary travellers. But, after all our inquiries into this branch of natural economy, much yet remains to be known, and we may conclude in the words of the ingenious Mr. White, "that whilst we observe with delight with how much ardour and punctuality those little birds obey the strong impulse towards migration or hiding, imprinted on their minds by their great Creator, it is with no small degree of mortification we reflect, that after all our pains and enquiries, we are not yet quite certain to what regions they do migrate, and are still further embarrassed to find that some actually do not migrate at all."

"Amusive birds! say where your hid retreat,
"When the frost rages, and the tempest beat;
"Whence your return, by such nice instinct led,
"When Spring, sweet season, lifts her bloomy head?
"Such baffled searches mock man's prying pride,
"The GOD of NATURE is your secret guide."

Lord Montfort and Colonel Delap.—The intended duel between these two gentlemen, we noticed in our last Number, and likewise a letter from Captain Spicer, Colonel Delap's second, stating some of the circumstances which attended the affair. Several letters have since passed between Sir George Jackson, the other second, and Captain Spicer, with the view of ascertaining by whose interference the meeting was prevented; both parties on that head declare themselves perfectly ignorant. The original misunderstanding between Lord Montfort and Colonel Delap arose from an expression used by the Noble Lord, in a letter to Captain Lyster, of the 1st Surrey, and which charged Colonel Delap wich having jockied his Lordship's nephew, Captain Challenor, by contriving that Lyster should have a seniority in his commission over Challenor.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WE must decline the insertion of the Poetic Favour of W. as being unfit for our Miscellany.

ERRATUM.—By an error of the Press, in the first page of our last Number, Mat-o'th'-Mint was stated to be "sister" to Miss Coiner; the word "sister" should have been altogether omitted.

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

TEARS OF FITZ-ARTHUR.

A Ballad.

THE sporting train with joy begin
To hail the rising morn,
And foxwold echoes to the din,
Of huntsman, hound, and horn,

With voice of fire, in eager haste
Fitz-Arthur cheer'd his pack,
How swift, how gallantly he past,
Sublime on Nimrod's neck.

Long, long, had Nimrod borne his lord,
The foremost in the chase;
And many a sigh of anguish pour'd,
While others shar'd his place.

And now with more than usual speed,
With more than usual fire,
He skimm'd each hill, each dale, and mead,
He clear'd each thorny briar.

Still forward, still as reynard fled,
Fitz-Arthur foremost came,
While many a panting hunter bled,
Along the field of fame.

And hark! the huntsman's louder peal
Proclaims the sport is o'er;
Oh! luckless sport! oh! fatal zeal!
For Nimrod lives no more.

The breeze that heard the peal of death,
That heard the game expire,
That breeze receiv'd the last, last breath,
Of Nimrod's dying fire.

" O say," (he cried) " ere yet thy horse
The debt of Nature pays,
Say, have I ran a duteous course,
To gain Fitz-Arthur's praise?"

" Oh! thou hast done a hunter's part,
Far, far, beyond thy race;
The pride, the glory of my heart,
My honour in the chase.

" Long, Nimrod, long thy sorrowing lord,
Shall rue the luckless day;
That cost a life so much ador'd,
That cost my gallant grey.

" No other horse shall serve thy place,
No other joys be sought;
Henceforth adieu to every chase,
Adieu to every sport."

POETICAL DESCRIPTION

Of a new and very amusing Game of Cards called " THE JEW."

In a Letter from a Gentleman of Oxford to his Sister in the Country.

AND now, my dear Mary, I beg to conclude,
Oh no—I'd forgot, I'll one moment intrude;
For I know country females can never be tired
Of things that are new, and in Oxford admired.
Here, of Loo many people were led to complain
That it was to their pockets an absolute drain,
And many who carry their heads high as rockets,

Are known, my dear girl, to have very low pockets.
I consulted a friend, in this case what to do,
When he gravely said, Sir, the best game is the Jew;
I said if 'twas cards, there were much better names,
That I had an aversion to all Jewish games;
For Jews, my dear Mary, are odd kind of folks,
And in money concerns very often play jokes.
He the game then explained, which he said was quite new,
And as novelty's pleasing, I send it to you;
You will doubtless conclude that it borders on vice,
For the game is decided by throwing of dice.
To prepare for this game, your attention's directed
To ten different cards for the purpose selected:
These cards so selected, if right, will be seen,
To begin with the Three, and ascend to the Queen;
From these ten you'll observe, though the number be few,
You must take out the Seven and call it the Jew:
And in placing the cards on the table you venture
A circle to form with the Jew in the centre.
Of ivory fishes you get a supply,
Which at sixpence a dozen you sell or you buy:
You sit round the table as quiet as mice,
And little is heard but the rattle of dice.
I wish to instruct you, and first you must learn
That the Ladies and Gentlemen throw in their turn:
Now suppose I throw ten, it is easy to see
That I put down ten fish, and so down to three.
Just the same with the rest, for as round the dice go,
You put fish on a card to the number you throw;
Now the second time round, 'tis my wish to explain,
That the same number thrown, brings the fish back again:
And whoever throws seven, if many or few,
They must all pay alike seven fish to the Jew.
'Tis an odd observation, and not at all new,
To be rich in extreme is as rich as a Jew;
And we frequently throw for an hour or more,
Therefore no one will say that our Jew can be poor;
And who shall be winner 'tis fortune to fix,
All belongs to the person who throws double six.
Of the Jew, my dear girl, you have now a slight view,
Which as we but just know it to you must be new;
And to play it I really with pleasure invite you,
As I have not a doubt but 'twill highly delight you.
Then to forward my wishes and you to entice,
I send you a box with a couple of dice.
And allow me dear Mary a wish to express
That your efforts in life may be crown'd with success.
And as fortune has favourites though they are few
While on numbers she frowns, may she smile upon you,
Make you perfectly happy and rich as a Jew.

SPRIGHTLY.

WHILST other Bards attune their lays
To some old favour'd crony,
A dog, or cat, may I not praise
The virtues of my Poney?

For sure, if merit claims a song,
He ought to shine in metre,
And would the Muse inspire my tongue,
No ditty should be sweeter.

If friendship be to share one's woe,
Or mirth, that sits more lightly,
No man can boast a friend more true
Than I possess in Sprightly.

Ah! many a time, both soon and late,
Through foul and pleasant weather,
We, such the urgent will of fate,
Have jog'd along together.

And

And was I e'er to grieving prone,
Which wise men deem a folly,
He'd answer me with groan for groan,
And seem quite melancholy.

Or, if I happen'd to be gay,
His sympathy was ready,
And, as he pranc'd along the way,
No curb could keep him steady.

No malice harbours in his heart,
Which is indeed a treasure,
More worth than gold, and, on my part,
Esteem'd beyond all measure.

His beauty we'll pass lightly o'er,
As what of little force is;
Or else you'd think him, to be sure,
A Paragon of Horses!

But then for speed to none he'll yield—
Such bottom, he ne'er flinches;
And, any odds, against the field
I'll match him—weight for inches:

One fault he has, to speak the truth,
Tho' jockies thrive by cheating—
One cursed fault!—it is a mouth—
A mouth, Sir!—that loves eating!

Yet taking him for all in all,
While this good frontlet's yellow,
Or broken knees rise from a fall,
We ne'er shall see his fellow!

A WINTER'S DAY.

Written in a State of Melancholy.

NOW, gloomy soul!—look out—now comes thy turn;
With thee behold all ravag'd nature mourn;
Hail the dim empire of thy darling night,
That spreads slow-shading o'er the vanquish'd light.
Look out with joy; the ruler of the day
Faint, as thy hopes, emits a glimm'ring ray;
Already exil'd to the utmost sky,
Hither, oblique, he turn'd his clouded eye.
Lo! from the limits of the wintry pole,
Mountainous clouds in rude confusion roll;
In dismal pomp, now hov'ring on their way,
To a sick twilight they reduce the day.
And hark! imprison'd winds, broke loose, arise,
And roar their haughty triumph thro' the skies,
While the driv'n clouds, o'ercharged with floods of rain,
And mingled lightning, burst upon the plain.
Now see, sad earth—like thine her alter'd state,
Like thee she mourns her sad reverse of fate!
Her smile, her wanton looks—where are they now?
Faded her face, and wrapt in clouds her brow!

No more th' ungrateful verdure of the plain,
No more the wealth-crown'd labours of the swain;
These scenes of bliss no more upbraid my fate,
Torture my pining thought, and rouse my hate;
The leaf-clad forest and the tufted grove,
Erewhile the safe retreats of happy love,
Stripp'd of their honours, naked now appear;
This is—my soul! the winter of their year:
The little noisy songsters of the wing,
All shiv'ring on the bough, forget to sing.
Hail, rev'rend Silence; with thy awful brow,
Be Music's voice for ever mute—as now;
Let no intrusive joy my dead repose
Disturb—no pleasure disconcert my woes.

In this moss-cover'd cavern, hopeless laid,
On the cold cliff I'll lean my aching head,
And, pleas'd with Winter's waste, unpitying see
All nature in an agony with me.
Rough rugged rocks, wet marshes, ruin'd tow'rs,
Bare trees, brown brakes, bleak heaths, and rushy moors,
Dead floods, huge cataracts, to my pleas'd eyes—
(Now I can smile)—in wild disorder rise;
And now the various dreadfulness combin'd,
Black Melancholy comes to doze my mind.

See! Night's wish'd shades rise spreading through the air,
And the lone hollow gloom for me prepare!
Hail, solitary ruler of the grave!
Parent of terrors! from thy dreary cave
Let thy dumb silence midnight all the ground,
And spread a welcome horror wide around.—
But, hark!—a sudden howl invades my ear!
The phantoms of the dreadful hour are near;
Shadows from each dark cavern now combine,
And stalk around, and mix their yells with mine.

Stop, flying Time! repose thy restless wing;
Fix here—nor hasten to restore the Spring:
Fix'd my ill fate, so fix'd let Winter be—
Let never wanton season laugh at me.

STANZAS.

Sung by Bellamy, at the Farewell Dinner, given to EARL MOIRA, by his Brother Masons, on his Departure for INDIA.

THOU soft-breathing lyre, for a while be suspended,
The social delight which thy numbers impart;
While sighs of regret with our raptures are blended,
And strains of affection flow warm from the heart.
Hail! Hail! Hail! to ev'ry bosom dear,
Hail! thou, to whose honour'd name,
We consecrate the parting tear.

Ye realms where the day-star first springs from the ocean;
How welcome the dawn of philanthropy's ray;
Ye nations that tremble in abject devotion,
By Ganges or Indus—rejoice in her sway.
Hail! Hail! Hail! &c. &c.

Go on, noble spirit! still guerdon'd with glory,
Pursue the bright track which thy fate has assign'd;
For thus shall thy name live ennobled in story,
Of Britain the pride, and the friend of mankind.
Hail! Hail! Hail! &c. &c.

Oh! deem not our hearts can e'er cease to revere thee,
Or still on thy virtues with rapture to dwell,
Re-calling those scenes to our souls that endear thee,
And the pain of that hour when we bade thee farewell!
Hail! Hail! Hail! &c. &c.

E'en then, while between us wide oceans are rolling,
Whene'er we assemble these rites to renew,
With magic illusion, our senses controlling,
Shall fancy restore thee again to our view.
Hail! Hail! Hail! &c. &c.

And when on that breast where bright honour still beaming,
Sheds lustre, excelling what King can bestow,
The pledge of Fraternal affection is gleaming,
With kindred emotions thy bosom shall glow.
Hail! Hail! Hail! &c. &c.

Oh! think, while glad millions their gratitude breathing,
For freedom and justice, thy name shall adore,
Fond friendship and joy, rosy chaplets are wreathing,
To greet thy return to thy lov'd native shore.
Hail! Hail! Hail! to ev'ry bosom dear,
Hail! thou, to whose honour'd name,
We consecrate the parting tear.
